In the time of war, you may remember, at the South and North, the question was whether the black troops would fight: but when they were put into the struggle on both sides, they did heroically. In the great day of eternity it will be found that it was not the white regiment of joys that gained your greatest successes, but the black troops of trouble, misfortune and disaster. Where you have gained one spiritual success from your prosperity, you have gained ten spiritual successes from your adversity.

There is no animal that struggles more violently than a sheep when you corner it and catch hold of it. Down in the glen I see a group of men around a lost sheep. A ploughman comes along and seizes the sheep, and tries to pacify it; but it is more frightened than ever. A miller comes along, puts down his grist, and caresses the sheep, and it seems as if it would die of fright. After a while some one breaks through the thicket. He says, "Let me have the poor thing." He comes up and lays his arms around the sheep, and it is immediately quiet. Who is the last man that comes? It is the shepherd. Ah, my friends, be not afraid of the shepherd's crook. It is never used on you, save in mercy, to pull you back. The hard, cold iceberg of trouble will melt in the warm gulf stream of divine sympathy.

There is one passage I think you misinterpret: "The bruised reed he will not break." Do you know that the shepherd in olden times played upon these reeds? They were very easily bruised; but when they were bruised they were never mended. The shepherd could so easily make another one, he would snap the old one and throw it away, and get another. The Bible says it is not so with our Shepherd. When the music is gone out of a man's soul, God does not snap him in twain and throw him away. He mends and restores. "The bruised reed he will not break."

> When, in the o'erhanging heavens of fate,
> The threatening clouds of darkness dwell,
> Then let us humbly watch and wait;
> It shall be well, it shall be well.
> And when the storm has passed away
> And sunshine smiles on flood and fell,
> How sweet to think, how sweet to say,
> It has been well, it has been well.

Next I speak of the shepherd's dogs. They watch the straying sheep, and drive them back again. Every shepherd has his dog—from the nomads of the Bible times, down to the Scotch herdsman watching his flocks on the Grampian Hills. Our shepherd employs the criticisms and persecutions of the world as his dogs. There are those, you know, whose whole work it is to watch the inconsistences of Christians, and bark at them. If one of God's sheep gets astray, the world howls. With more avidity than a shepherd's dog ever caught a stray sheep by the flanks or lugged it by the ears, worldlings seize the Christian astray. It ought to do us good to know that we are thus watched. It ought to put us on our guard. They can not bite us, if we stay near the Shepherd. The sharp knife of worldly assault will only trim the vines until they produce better grapes. The more you pound marjoram and rosemary, the sweeter they smell. The more dogs take after you, the quicker you will get to the gate.

You have noticed that different flocks of sheep have different marks upon them; sometimes a red mark, sometimes a blue mark, sometimes a straight mark, and sometimes a crooked mark. The Lord our Shepherd has a mark for his sheep. It is a red mark—the mark of the cross. "Blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

Furthermore, consider the shepherd's pasture-grounds. The old shepherds used to take the sheep upon the mountains in the summer, and dwell in the valleys in the winter. The sheep being out-of-doors perpetually, their wool was better than if they had been kept in the hot atmosphere of the sheep-cot. Wells were dug for th sheep and covered with large stones, i order that the hot weather might not spe the water. And then the shepherd led hi flock wherever he would; nobody dispute his right. So the Lord our Shepherd ha a large pasture-ground. He takes us i the summer to the mountains, and in th winter to the valleys. Warm days o prosperity come, and we stand on sun-gi Sabbaths, and on hills of transfiguratio and we are so high up we can catch glimpse of the pinnacles of the heaven city. Then cold wintry days of troub come, and we go down into the valley sickness, want, and bereavement, and say, "Is there any sorrow like unto m sorrow?" But, blessed be God, the Lor sheep can find pasture anywhere. I tween two rocks of trouble a tuft succulent promises; green pastures besi still waters; long sweet grass betwe bitter graves. You have noticed t structure of the sheep's mouth? It is sharp that it can take up a blade of gr or clover-top from the very narrow spot. And so God's sheep can pick comfort where others can gather no "The secret of the Lord is with th that fear him." Rich pasture, fount fed pasture, for all the flock of the Gr Shepherd.

> The hill of Zion yields
> A thousand sacred sweets
> Before we reach the heavenly fields,
> Or walk the golden streets.

Lastly: Consider the shepherd's fo The time of sheep-shearing was a v glad time. The neighbors gathered gether, and they poured wine and dan for joy. The sheep were put in a pl inclosed by a wall, where it was very e to count them and know whether any them had been taken by the jackals dogs. The inclosure was called the she fold. Good news I have to tell you that our Lord the Shepherd has a she fold, and those who are gathered i shall never be struck by the storm, s never be touched by the jackals of te tation and trouble. It has a high wa so high that no troubles can get in high that the joys cannot get out.

It is time we got over these mor ideas of how we shall get out of this wo You make your religion an undert plaining coffins and driving hearses. Y religion smells of the varnish of a fun casket. Rather let your religion to come out and show you the sheep that God has provided for you. Frances E. Willard, Christian Editor, Orator, and Temperance Reformer—A Career Devoted to Humanity.

In the morning of February 18, a world-wide sorrow greeted the tidings that Frances E. Willard was dead. Midnight found her dying, the dawn had found her safe with God. The Hotel Empire, New York City, where she breathed her last, was crowded with friends who watched and waited for the end: among them were many members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

By Miss Willard's bedside, Miss Gordon, her private secretary and constant companion, and Dr. Hills, her faithful physician, kept vigil until the spirit fled and only the beloved clay remained. That night of February 17–18 was a strange and troublous night in New York City. As night waned to midnight, as midnight waned to dawn, newsboys on the streets were crying extras; for the public pulse was feverish over the Cuban troubles: the Maine, with our brave sailors aboard, was at the bottom of Havana bay; the Spanish warship, Vizcaya, was steaming towards New York harbor; the air was full of rumors and unrest. But in the sick chamber, there was stillness in the presence of a soul passing into that blessed country where the love of God shines always, and where there are no more wars or rumors of wars—no more pain nor fever.

The one who was passing had fought a good fight, she had kept the faith, and was entering into the rest of her Lord. She had fought, not with fire and sword, but with the weapons of the Spirit; she had faced an enemy more powerful and deadly than armed battalions or iron-clad warships, an enemy of wider dominion than is covered by the flags of many nations. Frances E. Willard was President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union: and that is saying that she was a brave soldier and true, a good commander, and finally and best of all, a great and noble woman; for it needed all these qualities to hold that position as she held it and to use it as she used it.

THE LATE MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Miss Willard was born at Churchville, near Rochester, N. Y., September 28, 1839. Her parents were Josiah F. and Mary Thompson Hill Willard. When she was three years old, the family moved West. "Nineteen Beautiful Years," Miss Willard's biography of her sister Mary's early life, she has incidentally described her own youth at "Forest Home," her father's farm, at Janesville, Wis., "one of the loveliest villages to be found away from the hills of New England, nestling amid the profuse foliage and deep shadows of an old oak forest on the sunset shore of Lake Michigan." This early life was as beautiful as regarding both sisters. They cared for pets, specimens of the genuine fauna of the place, from lake margin and forest, hedge-row and hillside. These were watched in their haunts or petted on the farm, and finally laid away in the "Graveyard of the Pets" with tiny tombstones and childish inscriptions.

Before they were in their "teens," the two sisters indulged their intellectual tastes by organizing themselves into an Artists' Club, after the most regular models, with resolutions and provisos, setting up a studio which was thrown open on set days to the "public," i. e., to parents, brother and an occasional visitor. Sketching excursions were formally undertaken, with bows and arrows, a clasp-knife, two shepherd-dogs and a goat laden with provisions for lunch.

When Miss Willard was eighteen, the family moved to Evanston, Ill., where the two girls graduated in the Northwestern University. There, in 1862, Mary died; five years later her father died. In 1868 Miss Willard began a journey for study and observation through Europe and the East. Previous to this, she had successfully filled professorships in her Alma Mater and in the Pittsburg Female College, and served as Principal of Genesee Wesleyan Seminary at Lima, New York. She had also acted as Corresponding Secretary of the Woman's Centenary Association that aided in building Heck Hall and Garrett Biblical Institute. Upon her return she was made Professor of Æsthetics and Dean of the Woman's College in Evanston, Ill., from which work she was drawn by a compelling sympathy into the temperance movement and its allied interests. It was in the East that her sympathies were first roused about the condition of women, and on her return to America she gave public addresses on female education. Her unaffected style, graceful diction, and musical delivery attracted notice at once, and she speedily attained the reputation she afterward enjoyed. She has lectured extensively during the last twenty-seven years, and has at various times been editorially connected with different publications East and West. On the death of her brother in 1879, she succeeded him as Editor of the Chicago Evening Post; and for a number of years she has been Editor of The Union Signal.

When the great movement known as the Women's Temperance Crusade was begun in December, 1873, Miss Willard took a deep interest in the work. She saw her lifework opening in that direction. In the spring of 1874, the women who had been engaged all winter in crusading called conventions for consultation in their respective States, and from those conventions resulted several State organizations, called State Temperance Unions, which were confederated into the Women's National Christian Temperance Union at a great convention held in a Presbyterian Church at Cleveland, Ohio, in November, 1874. Miss Willard was elected Corresponding Secretary of the Union, and to her indefatigable and sagacious efforts is mainly due its growth in influence and numbers ever since. In 1879, she was unanimously elected President of the Union. At all its assemblies and conventions, and on every occasion when its efforts were to be extended, she has been the leading spirit and the inspiration of her associates.

Her life has been full of activities along temperance, philanthropic and educational lines. The World's Christian Temperance Union, organized Nov. 1883, with Margaret Bright Lucas of London, sister of John Bright, as President, and now established in more than forty countries with a membership of at least half a million, was in great measure the child of her brain: and in 1891, Miss Willard became its President, with Lady Henry Somerset of England as Vice-President at large. In accepting the leadership of the White Cross movement in her Unions, she was instrumental in obtaining enactments in twelve states for the protection of women. She was the originator of the Great Polyglot Petition against the Alcohol and Opium trade; the beautiful Woman's Temple in Chicago, is a monument to her, as well as to her many noble co-adjuters in honor of whose devotion its every stone is eloquent. Her literary labors have been unceasing. Books, magazine articles, tracts and editorials have followed each other in quick succession from her busy pen. Her latest, indeed, her last book, a volume of 504 pages, was recently issued by the Success Co., at No. 3 Cooper Union, New York. The title of this useful and voluminous work, "Occupations for Women" is in line with the purpose to which her whole life was set,—that of advancing the interests of her sex. Her sympathies and interests, though most fully invested in temperance work, were not limited to it. They were enlisted in every cause of philanthropy. When the relief depot was established in Marseilles, France, for the benefit of Armenian fugitives, she performed noble work in applying the funds provided by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The funeral services were held in the Broadway Tabernacle, N. Y., and were largely attended; after which the body was taken to Evanston for interment. Miss Willard bequeathed her estate (about $20,000) to the W. C. T. U.

THE MOODY MEETINGS.

Everything in Readiness for the Great Series of Revival Gatherings at Grand Central Palace, New York.

ARRANGEMENTS are now almost completed for the great series of revival services to be held by Evangelist Dwight L. Moody, in the Grand Central Palace of Industry, New York, beginning March 13. These services, as already announced in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, will last until March 20. The Industrial Building, in which the gatherings will take place, is located between Forty-third and Forty-fourth streets and Lexington avenue and Depew place, and is the most convenient and central building that could have been engaged for the purpose. A line of electric cars pass the front door, and a block off, two lines of horse-cars also pass. The Palace is contiguous to the Grand Central Station, and people from any of the suburbs can come there with the full assurance that they will be under shelter all the way. The elevated road runs into West Forty-second street station, and there is a covered passage connecting the station with the main hallway, so that persons who come from any ferry or railroad by the elevated trains can enter the hall of the Industrial Building without having once been under the necessity of going into the open air.

MR. J. H. BURKE.

THE INDUSTRIAL PALACE WHERE THE REVIVAL MEETINGS WILL BE HELD.

Music will be a prominent feature of the services throughout the week. Prof. D. B. Towner will be in charge of the singing at many of the meetings, and Mr. J. H. Burke will also take a leading part. Prof. Towner, as many of our readers may already know, has been engaged in evangelistic work for nearly eighteen years, and has on many former occasions ably assisted Mr. Moody at revival gatherings. His heart is in the work and he will be a valuable aid to Mr. Moody. Mr. Burke who belongs to the younger generation of Gospel singers, has already had a remarkable career in both Sunday School and evangelistic work. Thousands have been stirred by his voice in the great meetings at Cooper Union, Carnegie Hall and elsewhere. He has led choirs at many conventions and large religious assemblies in different parts of the country, and has labored side by side with Mr. Moody, Major Whittle, Rev. John McNeill and other evangelists whose work is known all over the civilized world.

The Sunday School

The Wheat and the Tares.

Sunday School Lesson for March 13. Matt. 13: 24-30; 36-43. Golden Text Matt. 13: 37.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

WHEAT AND DARNEL.

THE wheat and the tares is the first parable of the kingdom. The evangelist Matthew specially sets forth the kingdom and the kingship of the Lord Jesus. In this Gospel we learn how the wise men seek the infant Jesus with the words, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" (Matt. 2: 2.) John the Baptist comes, saying, "Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." (Matt. 3: 2.) After the devil had unsuccessfully tempted, by offering him his sceptre as prince of this world (Matt. 4: 8, 9), our Lord preached John the Baptist's sermon over again, and then went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom." (Matt. 3: 17, 23.) He began his wonderful Sermon on the Mount by showing how the meek and the persecuted possess the kingdom of heaven (Matt. 5: 2, 10), and he taught that the ruling principle of all who would follow him must be to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things (food and clothing) should be added (Matt. 6: 33), for "the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." (Rom. 14: 17.)

But a crisis had arrived in the ministry of Jesus. The Pharisees animated by jealousy and stung by the power of his life and of his words, sought to destroy him; and in their enmity they went the length of attributing to Satan the works which Jesus wrought, and by this committed the terrible sin of blaspheming the Holy Ghost. Calmly and in all the quiet dignity which belonged to him, the Lord explained to them that a kingdom divided against itself could not stand. "But," he said, "If I by the Spirit of God cast out devils, then is the Kingdom of God come upon you" (Matt. 12: 28, R. V.), and he pronounced the irrevocable doom of such as blaspheme the Holy Ghost. Henceforth, that he might not increase their condemnation, Jesus spoke chiefly in parables, and when his disciples inquired why he did so, he answered: "Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given," and referring to Isa. 6: 9, he declared that in these very men were fulfilled that judicial hardening of the heart, that blindness and deafness described by the prophet.

"On that day (Matt. 13: 1, R V) Jesus went out of the house and sat by the seaside, and there were gathered unto him great multitudes," and that they might better hear his teaching, he entered into a boat and they ranged on the beach, listened to him. First he taught the parable of the sower of the seed, but without likening it to the Kingdom of Heaven, the great sower scatters his seed outside his kingdom, upon every kind of soil. In spiritual as in temporal things "he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust" (Matt. 5: 45). On his side all is grace. "He so loved the world." But oh, how differently the seed of the Word is received! The "wayside" does not open to admit it at all; the rocky soil takes it in, but it gets no real grip upon the life, a little persecution and the feeble sprout dies away; the thorny soil gives it a place, but only to be shared with "the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches." None but the good soil really receives him, and "to them that received him gave he the right to become children of God, even to them that believe in his name, which were born, not of blood, nor of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (John 1, 12, 13, R.V.)

The parable of the sower and the seed is an introduction to the parables which follow. The "seed" is "the word of the kingdom" (v. 19), and is sown in the hearts of men. In the next parable the image is changed, and the seed no longer bears the same meaning. "The Kingdom of Heaven is likened unto a man that sowed good seed (and this seed is "the sons of the kingdom") in his field, but while men slept, the enemy came and sowed tares (darnel, a very common weed, very much like rye grass or bearded wheat), and went away. The good and the bad, the true and the false germinated and developed together, and only when the good seed began to bear fruit did the tares appear.

It is a photograph of the whole dispensation. Truly "He which soweth the good seed" sowed none but the "sons of the kingdom (ver. 38, R.V.) in this world of his, as specimens and types of what his kingdom was to be. But, "the prince of this world" (John 14: 30) has set himself to dispute and overthrow Christ's kingdom. He also is a sower and sows his own sons in the likeness of the sons of the kingdom, and we have, in every land where the Gospel is preached, the true seed and the spurious imitations side by side. How can they be distinguished? "By their fruits ye shall know them." (Matt. 7: 16). Only Christ can bring forth Christ-likeness. No seed will bring forth wheat. If any man be in Christ he is a new creature; old things have passed away, behold all things are become new (II. Cor. 5: 17). If sin be in you, the body is dead because of sin, but the spirit is life because of righteousness;" the spirit is no slave to the body.

The identical teaching comes out in another parable (ver. 47-50, R. V.). "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind: which, when it was filled," but not until it was filled; "they drew up upon the beach, and they sat down and gathered the good into vessels, but the bad they cast away." So shall it be in the consummation of the age (R.V. margin): "the angels shall come forth and sever the wicked from among the righteous, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Mixture is the character of the age. The attempt has been continually made to weed out the false from the true and to form a pure church, but it has proved futile; it is forbidden.

"Let both grow together until the harvest," is the command from on high; no other eye than that which is a flame of fire can distinguish infallibly the false from the true; no other hand than his can avoid destroying the tree with the false. And the two ripen each other. The martyr's stake is by no means the only manufactory for saints; an unconverted family, and still more, a worldly, religious family —when the wheat and the thorns strive for mastery, has often proved to be the furnace which has separated the gold from the dross in some of God's saints. The daily misunderstandings, the constant reproaches, the endless criticisms, which the true "sons of the kingdom" have to undergo at the hands of those who say, "Lord, Lord," without doing "the will of our Father, which is in heaven" (Matt. 7: 21), go to ripen the patience and perfect the love of one who has learned that "all things work together for good to them that love God," and the fruit of the Spirit mellows under the fiery heat. At the same time, the very patience and Christlike love with which undeserved wrongs are borne by them only angers the more those who would be thought Christians, but who have never yielded themselves up to Christ.

"AN ENEMY HATH DONE THIS!"

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

CHRIST made no secret of his reason for using parables. There were, he intimated, a number of his hearers who would not receive the truth, if they perceived at the outset what it was that he was striving to teach them. They did not want to be disturbed, to be made uncomfortable, to have to repent and quit their sins. If they saw that Jesus was leading them in that direction, they would close their eyes lest they should see with them. So he told them incidents which they would remember and which would incite live thoughts that would germinate afterwards. The first of these parables was that of the sower, in which three-fourths of the seed sown, fails. He follows, in the parable of the tares, the future of the remaining fourth, which was good seed in good ground. It was not yet at the end of its perils. It would be in close association with something resembling it in appearance, but radically different in nature, inasmuch as it was poisonous. The sower's impulsive servants would have rooted up the bad growths, but that is not the sower's plan. The bad and the good are to grow together till the harvest, when their difference will be clear. No danger to the good will be possible then, as the separation is to be delayed until it can be done without risk. When we see good and bad men in society, both growing and flourishing, we are not to suppose that God takes no account of the difference. They will not always be side by side. When they come to maturity they will be separated, and each will have their appropriate end.

Sowed good seed in his field. The present condition of the world is not a reproach to God, as some contend. He sowed good seed, the enemy sowed the evil. Christ concerned himself with teaching the one lesson of patience to the end, but it is legitimate to remember that in the kingdom of grace the nature of the tares may be changed. They may become wheat, the evil may become good. An eminent preacher said, late in life: "I was never intended for a preacher. I was built for a bad man. When I was school I was a real terror. I had mo fights than any other boy, and I was all kinds of mischief. I shall never fo get the astonishment of the inn-keeper the village where I lived, when I visite it after an absence of thirty years, a stayed at his house. I remembered hi as an old school-fellow, and recalled m self to his recollection. 'John,' he said 'oh, yes, I remember John very well. you are he? And what might you doing now?' I told him I was a min ter, and he burst out laughing. 'We he said, 'the devil has been cheated out you, for if ever there was a devil's in you were one.' I could have laughed w him for very joy. Nothing short of t grace of God could have made a minis out of such a nature."

Whence then hath it tares? The qu tion is still being propounded with prospect of solution. No one can tell the origin of evil. The tares in this c were probably the darnel which is simi in nature to the American "chess or chea In its earlier growth it resembles whe but is injurious if eaten, and to some p sonous, producing violent nausea. De Alford narrates that a bad neighbor o served him this identical trick by sow charlock in one of his fields by nig Trench cites an instance of an outgo tenant in Ireland who, wishing to aver himself on his landlord and the incom tenant, sowed wild oats on the farm. is also on record that the plag of the thistle in California ca from a Scottish settler, who v so patriotic that he sent for so Scotch thistles to remind him his old home. He did not int to do mischief, but the wind c ried the thistle-down into neighbors' fields, whence spread all over the State.

Let both grow together. I well for the bad that the g live among them, so that by as ciation they may benefit. Bu is very deplorable when the g are contaminated. He silenced on one occasion by Stuart Robinson, to whom was insisting that "your chu members are no better than worldly people are." The mi ter challenged the assertion asked for proof. A KING UNDER THE CAMERA.

Negus Menelek of Abyssinia and his Court Photographed for "The Christian Herald"—Imposing Rites of the Native Christian Church.

(From Our Special Correspondent.)

PARIS, February 10, 1898.—The march of events in Eastern Africa goes on with rapidity. While England and France are apparently in collision on the Gold Coast, where clashing interests may precipitate a war, Abyssinia, which was only lately a scene of conflict is enjoying peace and progress. Few were aware that the Negus Menelek, was preparing to enter the Rasna as a rival of Great Britain for supremacy in the Soudan. The occurrences of the last few weeks leave little doubt as to the intentions both of the French explorer, Marchand, and of the dusky Ethiopian potentate. Marchand after having been reported as massacred with his companions and buried, is now known to be but a short distance from Harrar, while Menelek who was merely credited with the intention of taking the field against an insubordinate vassal, the Ras Mangascia, is suspected with good reason of harboring designs of a far more serious nature, namely, an armed resistance to Sirdar Kitchener's advance from Berber. And if this should come to pass, we may anticipate a campaign of a rather more sanguinary description than was the military promenade of the redcoats under Sir Robert Napier's leadership thirty years ago, which ended with the death of Menelek's predecessor, King Theodorus, and the capture of his mountain stronghold. Count Leontieff, who hurriedly left Odessa recently, accompanied Menelek's envoy to Russia, Ito Joseph, will probably reach Abyssinia in time to participate in the great events now preparing for the immediate future. It is appropriate and timely, therefore, to present the accompanying photographs which Count Leontieff took during his last sojourn at Entoto. Some of them afford a glimpse of the religious side of Abyssinian life of which the outside Christian world knows yet but little. What we do know is that the Abyssinians claim to be Christians, and that in their own barbaric manner, strongly tinged with the spirit of fetichism, they worship the Saviour of mankind. The four dignified individuals drawn up in a row, in one photograph, are the officiating priests of the so-called Holy Trinity Church, which is situated about a hundred yards from the imperial palace at Entoto. Believing themselves to be descended from the ancient Jews, the Abyssinians have adopted many of the rites and ceremonies peculiar to that people, to which they have added, however, various fantastic ceremonials of their own. There is a description of one of these ceremonies at Ghebi, an imperial residence, as gathered by the writer lately from Prince Henry of Orleans and Count Leontieff. It is the festival of Easter, one of the most important in the Abyssinian calendar, and these four prelates played a prominent part in it. The central figure of the festival is, of course, King Menelek himself, direct descendant, as he believes, of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. To him the clergy are to announce officially the resurrection, and this is how the solemn rite is accomplished:

His Majesty sits cross-legged upon a red velvet platform, gold embroidered, beneath a vast tent or canopy ornamented with lilies. Behind him stand a few youthful courtiers, with bejewelled fans which they keep in constant motion, and on his right, but on a lower level, are seated the two Abonnas, or Grand Bishops of the Coptic Church from Egypt, and the venerable Etchiquie, or Grand Chief of the Abyssinian Mayors. Directly in front of the monarch, on the steps of the platform, crouches the heleagique, or chief of the secular clergy. The Empress Taitou is meanwhile hidden from view behind a huge canvass drawn up over a white building near by, but as the same is provided with loop-holes, she and her ladies in waiting lose none of the details of the proceedings.

The scene is a truly marvelous one, for as a fitting frame to the centre piece, there stands around the platform a vast assemblage of priests, officials, warriors and townspeople, all attired in their gaudiest costumes. The deacons of the provincial churches occupy the front rank and are dressed in togas, something like those worn in ancient Rome, richly ornamented and cut up into long pendants to imitate a lion's skin. All the colors advance to the foot of the platform, moving in a half circle fifty at a time. They wear the national Abyssinian chama, or white toga, with a red band; also white turbans on their heads. With their right hand they swing a metal rattle, while their left grasps a crutched stave, the symbol of their priestly office. To the accompaniment of a peculiar orchestra composed of long silver drums, conducted by a high priest, the paraders intone a weird chant, a corruption of the psalms of David, the "Alleluias," of which are set to a marked polyphonous rythm. Three or four singers in the ranks advance to the foot of the platform, stooping to slide their feet along as though they wished to press them on the ground. These steps recall to mind the Jewish dances round the Ark. The moment is at hand when the earth rejoices, and they march more vigorously. The staves are laid aside, a circle is formed, the singing and dancing increase in intensity and are accompanied by clapping of hands. The celebrants seat themselves in a group at the foot of the platform, the folk in the way are driven off by a policeman with a long whip, and the way is cleared for a fresh church, and a new performance.

A corner of the cathedral or church of the Holy Trinity arouses the special interest of the visitor. The panels are the work of a native artist who flourished in the middle ages, and although crude in treatment, they disclose a very fair knowledge of the human form on the designer's part. They will assuredly compare most favorably in that particular with some contemporaneous work which I have seen in the Louvre Galleries. The poor fellow probably never beheld a white man in his whole life, and so he pictured the Saints and even the Avenging Archangel as dusky Ethiopians, both in his own mind and on the canvas. That the plastic arts were not then unknown, is furthermore shown by their success in mixing colors, the pigment of their paintings, for instance, being as fresh and bright to-day as if they had been just applied.

Although dealing with a subject of an entirely different order, the picture of Menelek "kodacking," his followers will probably not be found the least interesting of our photographs. M. Monrichon, one of the Frenchmen who visited Abyssinia a year ago on a special mission to the Negus, made this unique photograph.

fascinate the eye, plus the glitter of a thousand jewels and the reflections of the gold and silver tiaras, the finely chiselled crowns, the large filigree Greek crosses, the broad pointed lances, the shields ornamented with lions, rampant in gold and brilliant amethysts as centre pieces. It is a scene taken bodily out of the Old Testament; it conjures up to the mind's eye the barbaric splendor of ancient civilization. One might almost imagine oneself at the Court of the Queen of Sheba, Menelek's dusky ancestor.

In turn, the officials of the different churches of the districts of Addis Ababa and Entoto Menelek has become a camera enthusiast, and with his "photo-jumelle," which is worked like an opera glass, maps off everything in sight. In this picture he is shown in the act of making an exposure of his major domo, the Swiss engineer, Ilg, of whom so much has been written of late. Ilg shares with Leontieff the privileges of advising and guiding His Majesty in all matters of state. Between the three of them, the destinies of Ethiopia are in good hands.

The Bazaars of Cairo.

TO the stranger in Cairo, its quaint streets, with their mixed population of many nationalities, form a picturesque and ever-changing kaleidoscope. Comparatively few of these streets have succumbed to Western innovations. They are usually rough and unpaved, and the many projecting balconies and barred windows that jut far out from the sides of the buildings give them a confined appearance that is by no means agreeable to one accustomed to wide avenues and large breathing-spaces. But the architectural style of the houses, no less the varied and picturesque dress of the people themselves, are such as delight the eye of an artist. Riders on camels; Moslem ladies veiled with the yashmak, usually riding diminutive led donkeys; Arabs in bright-hued robes; turbaned Turks; Jews, whose unmistakable physiognomy proclaims their race; messengers, porters, tradesmen of every craft and an occasional European or American—these are but a few of the everyday sights one encounters in this Eastern cosmopolitan city. One of the most frequented thoroughfares is the "Mooskee," which has many fine points of attraction. It contains a number of European shops, but as one proceeds along the narrow pavement, he sees many native shops also open to the street, and the shopmen sitting cross-legged, ready to deal with any customer who may come along. A native Cairo shop is usually about six feet square, with front open to the street, and the goods piled within easy reach of the seller, so that he may conduct his business without the necessity of rising. Many of the merchants are Syrian or Coptic Christians, and they close their shops on Sunday. Other streets are the Sook el Hamzowee, Sook el Attarin, where drugs and perfumes are sold; the Sook el Soudan, where African products predominate. Among the bazaars, there is a kind of rude trade classification. In one (that of the jewelers) the gold and silversmiths of the city are represented. In the Sook-en-Vahhasin, or bazaar of the coppersmiths, one finds a great and imposing array of articles, including trays of copper and brass, pots and other kitchen utensils, ink and pen holders, tongs, shovels, stew pans, coffee pots, ewers and basins. Our artist, in the colored illustration on the first page of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, has depicted a section of the "street of the coppersmiths." Another attractive bazaar is that devoted to perfumes, where visitors come to buy the famed "attar of roses." The shoe bazaar and bazaar of weapons are also full of interest.

Under Nobody's Auspices...

The Story of a Brave Girl's Effort to Win Souls for Christ

By CAROLINE A. CREEVEY.

With an effort Miss Marion drew herself together, and taking something from her bag, said, "Do you see this fossil fish? It came from Wyoming. Millions of such fish lie buried there, in the mountains, pressed flat, and made into stone by successive layers of mud, earth and rock. How long is it since this little fish was soft flesh and bones, a bright thing of life, with fins and tail playing in the water? How long? How can I tell? Not so long as those souls lost in darkness will wander. Men and brothers! In the mud and slime of that dark country, the souls, grain by grain, atom by atom, grow hard. A fossilized soul!

"But could not Christ have saved even this soul?

"He tried. It was for this soul He died. But the soul refused. Men and Brothers! Your souls have begun to fossilize, else you would not drink, nor use foul language. The soft soul can only live in a decent body, which is pure, sweet and clean. Working does not harden the soul. How often do hard hands and soft souls go together! Christ worked. He loves working men. But I tell you," pointing to one and another, "your soul is petrifying with drink; yours with swearing and cursing; yours with your murderous temper; yours with gambling. I am told this is no place for a lady. Then it's no place for Christ."

The audience was still as death. Nothing could be heard but the soft sighing of the wind outside. The girl's voice sank to a whisper sometimes, but not a word that she said was lost. Miss Marion now came to the edge of the platform. She leaned towards her audience, and continued:

"Men and brothers! Listen to this true story. A man on horseback was passing in a dark night along a lonely road. He came to a river. There was no turning back. He must go forward, although he knew not how strong the current might be, nor whether he could reach the opposite shore. His horse is a brave swimmer. It is a perilous passage, but they have got beyond the current, the horse steps on firm bottom, they will soon be safe. Safe, did I say? Not yet. What ails the horse? He ceases to make progress. He cannot lift his feet; he is sinking. The awful truth breaks upon the rider. They are caught in a quicksand. He urges the poor beast to one more endeavor. In vain. The horse struggles frantically, but sinks the faster. And the man? There is one hope of safety for him, a mere chance, for, recollect, it is dark, and he cannot see the shore. He can but venture. Raising himself, and balancing himself on the saddle, he puts all his strength into one mighty spring. It is a jump for life. Can he reach the shore and escape the quicksand? If by so much as an inch, he is safe. Can he? Does he? Ah! thank God! His feet strike solid ground. But woe to the poor beast! The very impetus of the rider's jump pushes him further down. He sinks in the more swift and sure. Soon, with that awful cry which terror extorts from a horse, he disappears, drawn under the water, under the sand. Men and brothers! You do not wish to die such a death as that. Yet a quicksand lies between you and the other side of the dark river, which you and I must soon cross over. Some of us will safely reach the farther shore. Some of us will perish, unless with a mighty spring we clear the quicksands. Jump now! Jump to-night, to-morrow!"

It is impossible to describe the effect produced by these words, which Miss Marion uttered. Her face was white, her features were tense and drawn, her eyes shone like stars. A murmur broke from the men, but quickly ceased. Now the girl's voice sank to a whisper. Clasping her hands above her head she prayed:

"God in heaven! Christ has sacrificed himself for these men, his brothers. Only his mighty strength can carry them through the dark river. May they jump into thy arms now and be safe."

Miss Marion could not utter another word. Extreme emotion overpowered her. She sank into the chair and buried her face in her hands. She sobbed aloud.

One of the men sprang to her side.

"Don't, miss. Don't take on like that. I never knew it was so bad with us. I'm after jumping at once, ma'am. And it's Jack Muldoon'll make the other fellers here jump, too."

Another said, "I'm clean beat out. It's the darkness that's around me sure. I'm going to jump."

"Yes, Joe," cried a third, coming from the rear, "my breath comes hard like; I believe it's suffocating I am."

"Don't, miss," pleaded another. "To see the little leddy like that!"

Many came and crowded around the girl, eager to comfort her. Their feeling was for her. She knew this. She opened her eyes and looked into their faces. She gave her hand to one and another. A wonderful love suffused her face. To those men she seemed like an angel. Philip Hardie like the others was spellbound. He could not take his eyes from her face.

Miss Marion took up her mandolin, played and sang with a voice full of tears,

On Christ the solid rock I stand,
All other ground is sinking sand.

While she sang she gathered strength. After the hymn was finished she said, "Men and brothers! I do not believe in an emotional conversion. Your feelings must not guide. Your wills must act, and that they cannot do while your feelings are aroused. Will you do now just what I ask you? Go home. Don't, please, stop at the grogshops. If by to-morrow night, you are quite ready to jump, meet me here. You will not all come. Some of you whose hearts have begun to petrify will think you were foolish to have been moved by a girl. But I have told you the truth only and you must believe me, and most of you will come. I see by your faces. My life for yours, we shall find the way out of this darkness into life and light."

Then she said "Good-night," and the men went out silently, in little groups, all as if under a magic spell. Only, that in the corner, Philip Hardie lingered. Never in his life had he been so moved. He could no longer doubt the girl's earnestness, sincerity or power. She had not preached, as preaching goes. Not a word about the plan of salvation. Darkness, quicksands! It was horrible. He sympathized with the men, and pulled nervously at his necktie, as if he, too, were suffocating. He very much wished to speak with her, but when, after a time, sadly, almost with the air of one defeated, she gathered her Bible, mandolin, and other things together and with eyes cast down, unconscious of Mr. Hardie's presence, walked through the hall and out of the door, he could not disturb her. It seemed irreverent to bring himself to her notice. She was all at once lifted above him, a superior being. He wondered at the prejudice he had conceived against her, and then he wondered that he no longer objected to this girl's preaching. Rather he felt a strong desire to uphold her in her work, and help to make it successful. All he could do was to follow her to her boarding-house, and see her safe within.

This was the beginning of a series of meetings. The next evening, and the next, and for many nights. Liberty-Pavilion was filled with rough men, who hung on the words of the girl-preacher, as if their lives were in her hands. She always addressed them as "Men and Brothers!" Her method—if method it could be called—was to make them feel an overpowering sense of danger, the danger of being hopelessly lost, forever wandering away from Christ. Then she put him, their Saviour, before them. She did not make the way in which they must walk easy. She called crime and sin by their true names, and painted them in hideous colors. She said that to follow Christ was to turn their backs on those things which they had always loved. "You cannot walk two ways at once," she said, "and there is no third way." Her figures of speech were ever varying and flashing. They were always vivid, and held her audience. But, above all, it was her own intense earnestness which brought the men to do her bidding. Mr. Hardie had heard eloquent preachers. He had never been thrilled by them as he was, invariably, by this girl. Where had she learned to speak thus? He smiled as he thought of the elegant Dr. Humber, who learnedly and brilliantly discoursed in his church, crowded with well-dressed people, at home, and whose sermons were reported for the next day's paper. What success would he have here among these men of Oakland? But this girl's words were bearing unmistakable fruit. The men washed themselves before coming to the meetings. One evening the hall had been swept and cleaned. A jar of wild flowers appeared on the table beside a glass of water. Miss Marion always thanked the men for their attentions, and quietly looked her commendation of their improved personal appearance. After the meetings, she took them by the hand, so simply, so naturally, they were completely won to do her wishes. She became like a queen among them, and they were loyal and obedient subjects, eager to prolong her stay, and make her happy

It was now three weeks since Miss Marion came to Oakland, and Philip Hardie had been able to speak to her only once or twice during that time. When not about her work she stayed in her room at her boarding house, and ate her meals there. She began to show signs of nervous exhaustion. A tired and wo look came over her face. Mr. Hard was apprehensive lest the girl's fra body should be unequal to the task sh had set herself. He wished to speak her, to expostulate with her, compellir her to regard herself. For, of a sudde it had dawned upon him, that he car very much, whether she broke down not. On her part, she seemed indiffere to him. She went about her work alon He might have helped her, but she d not ask his help. Her face was with hi day and night, now smiling and friend or serious, earnest, and pleading, nc calm and thoughtful like the Sistine M donna's, again, deeply troubled, as whe in her meetings, she felt the burden lost souls. The quick change of her e pression at such times was wonderf But always it was love that beamed fr her eyes, love troubled or hopeful. spite of her youth, it was the motl which was the strongest part of her n ture. The men regarded her as suc and made of her a sort of confessor, c fiding to her the secret of their lives, ev their careless, reckless sins. The m hardened among them became gentle w her. She stirred their better natures, a aroused that desire to be good which s believed is latent in the heart of even t most depraved human creature.

Philip Hardie had fully made up mind that the beautiful, changing f was expressive of a transparent, fearl guileless nature, such as it had ne been his good fortune to meet in world of fashion and pleasure, where had been his fate to study young lad He often mused as to what the past hist of this girl might be; whether she ha family who knew and approved of work. She was sitting one evening, wearily she always did, in the hall, after the n had gone out. But she reached out hand and greeted Mr. Hardie witl smile as he came towards her. He sea himself on the edge of the platform at feet. She put the mandolin in its c and rose to go.

"Please sit down a minute, Miss rion," he besought her. "I cannot t you anywhere else, and I must speak you. What do you do all the day in y poor little room? Why do you never t a meal with the men? THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

In Southern Homes.

Historic Homesteads and Chapels Along the Beautiful James River—Old Dominion Landmarks.

NOT many journeys can be more interesting to the student of American history than a sail from Hampton Roads up the James River, past Richmond, to City Point, and then by rail to Petersburg, a quiet little town, replete with historic associations, but overshadowed by the growing and beautiful capital, just twenty miles away. One will pass early in the route Smithfield, where a chapel, said to be the second oldest church built in the Virginia colony, stands in a good state of preservation, though it bears the date 1632; materials and workmanship were of the best; the timber was brought from England. In Petersburg, at the end of the journey, in the midst of an ever-enlarging cemetery, which was once a simple churchyard, stands old Blandford Church. The bricks were brought from England, each wrapped, it is said, in paper.

From Smithfield to Blandford are many an ancient chapel; some with tattered registers still preserved; all with graveyards full of historic names. The country-seats along the James had their little chapels, where the people of colonial days attended service. This was after the fashion of the mother country, from which they had so lately come. The houses were modeled on those of England. From time to time, however, they were added to as the family were enlarged, or the demands of hospitality increased, until the architecture seems of no determined pattern; but, as seen from the river, these antiquated mansions are very picturesque, as they stand surrounded by gnarled and aged trees, and extensive lawns, with the negro quarters forming a village in the background. These houses have wide portals, grand stairways, lofty ceilings and elaborate carvings. On their walls hang portraits of men whose words yet serve to thrill American patriotism.

Our illustration furnishes a glimpse of one of the most famous of these old homes, Brandon, the residence, since the early Old Dominion days of the Harrison family. A Speaker of the House of Burgesses, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, a Governor of Virginia, a President of the United States, whose histories are linked with that of Brandon, bore this name. Near the little chapel at Tabin Point, Surrey, a crumbling tombstone, bears the epitaph: "Here lyeth the body of the Honourable Benjamin Harrison, Esquire, who did justice, loved mercy and walked humbly with his God." In the churchyard at Westover, a little way up the river from Brandon, is a monument to another famous Harrison.

Now, as in the past, the doors of these old homes are open to the wayfaring guest and the stranger; and now, as in the past, their tenants are proud to give glad welcome to the traveling preacher or colporteur, and each house is pleased to be known as the "preacher's home." There is not the baronial magnificence of entertainment observed in colonial days, but the spirit is quite as free and sincere. The homely farm work of plowing and reaping goes on outside, and carts and wagons, bearing grain and grist, ply between barns and mills, and barns and docks; neighbors often visit each other by boats going up and down the river. Friends come from Petersburg or Richmond, or great cities, north, east and west, and share bed and board at their pleasure. The quiet home-life goes on, among old-fashioned surroundings of spindle-leg and claw-foot furniture, of wide fire-places and brass fire dogs, and hospitality goes hand-in-hand with gentle charity.

AN OLD-FASHIONED VIRGINIA FARM-HOUSE.

Mamma's Valentine.

A pretty story is told of four little folks who went out with mamma to buy valentines for little friends and for each other.

They had a great time selecting these valentines, and the story-teller, Mary Joanna Porter, says "no one but a mother would have tried to manage such an affair." There was much whispering and indecision, and much trying of the salesman's as well as of mamma's good patience.

The choosing of a valentine good enough for papa was almost provocative of brain-fever for all concerned: but at last, as the store was being closed, the tremendous enterprise was concluded, and mamma smiling, if a bit harassed, passed out with her triumphant brood. That night in the play-room there was consternation and heartache on the part of troubled little folks. They had no valentine for mamma. What should they do? At last they determined to make one out of a big sheet of writing-paper, with the aid of pencils and printed letters by painstaking little fists. Next morning when the door bell rang in quick succession and white envelopes fluttered in, there was one for mamma. She thought she had never had so nice a valentine, and this was the way it read:

My dear mamma, I do love you, (Eugene)
And I, mamma, I love you, too; (Horace)
I love you more than I can tell, (Mabel)
I hope to please you very well. (Edith)

National Flowers.

France has the lily,
England the rose,
And everybody knows
Where the shamrock grows.

The history of flowers as national emblems is curious and interesting, the history of their choosing in each case making a pretty story in history or legendary lore. France has had the iris, or fleur-de-lis, since the time of King Clovis, to whom, the story says, an angel from heaven presented the device, embroidered in gold on a banner of blue. The pomegranate is the flower of Spain. The blue corn-flower, so well beloved of the old Kaiser William, is Germany's blossom. Prussia takes the linden leaf. The fragrant mignonette is the favorite of Saxony, the lowly leek of Wales. The modest violet is well beloved of Greece; under Napoleon it displaced the iris in France. Rome, which once crowned its rulers and wise men with the oak leaf, loves the lily now. The water-lily of the Nile—the lotus—has been Egypt's sacred flower. The chrysanthemum belongs to Japan. Canada knows the maple leaf for hers. The United States, so far, loves all the flowers, making choice of none.

A Young Girl's Picture Gallery.

In these days of splendid illustrations, it is not difficult for anyone to make a passably good collection of pictures. But few would do so to put them to the same use as did a young girl whose home was in an old-fashioned farm-house. An exchange tells what she did with the illustrations:

"She has made of her bedroom an interesting and beautiful nook. She dislikes white walls. For many months she has collected really good illustrations from different periodicals, and with tiny tacks has fastened these to her walls. This room charmed me. It is a light, airy apartment, and the pictures show to advantage. One corner is devoted to Gibson's imposing men and incomparable girls, while another is given up to Du Maurier.

In a little niche in this room I saw the picture of the sleeping Joan of Arc. In what she calls her sacred corner is an exquisite copy of Hoffmann's "Head of the Christ," and near this are several pictures of divinely sweet angels—among others, two angelic cherubs taken from one of Correggio's paintings. In still another part of the room is what this clever girl calls her "anti-blues collection." This is a group of pictures of babies and children, all of whom are so chubby and sweet that one finds herself unconsciously smiling back into the pretty, innocent faces."

Put Off All Her Jewels.

A writer in an exchange tells of an interesting incident during a recent visit to Madras, India. In an orphanage there he saw:

A zenana woman who until that day had never seen the face of any man except her husband! She shrank back into a corner as a fawn, and with a sweet, sad, faint voice sang three hymns, including, "All the Day Long It Is Jesus." The central figure in that company—no I must not finish that sentence; we knew the unseen Christ was there, for did not our hearts burn within us? The central visible figure was Sooboonagam Ommal, a very rich, high-caste Brahmin woman whom Woman's truest Friend and Lover had captured, won, transformed and glorified; so that the proud and brilliant heathen lady of three years ago has put off all her jewels, donned the humblest garb, delights to sweep floors and take her part in the most menial duties in the orphanage, and to go from zenanas from day to day to tell the old, old story, rejoicing to suffer shame for his name.

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

WE might better have spared another!
In these days of sin and dole,
We had need of her, with her ready hand,
Her lofty, heroic soul.

She had done the work of the angels
Whatever she found to do;
Scorning no lowly service,
Faithful and brave and true.

Ever beside her, walking
Was One like the Son of Man,
She knew the voice of the Master,
She wrought by the Master's plan.

Serene and stern and steady,
She dared gigantic wrong,
Her lance bore down the evil,
For the battle is to the strong.

We might better have spared another,
Yet she had earned her rest.
And into the light of the living
She has entered, crowned and blessed.

Children's Prayers.

IF one would see examples of pure simplicity and transparent sincerity in prayer, let him look at those of children, says C. B. Wetherbe, in an exchange. It sometimes seems to me that God is far more greatly pleased with the prayers of young children than with those offered by adults. This story is told of a poor German boy who was anxious to attend a Moravian school. He wrote a letter and put it into the post office, addressed to the Lord Jesus in Heaven. It read thus: "My Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, I have lost my father—we are very poor; but I know that thou tellest in thy Word that whatsoever we shall ask God in thy name he will give it to us. I believe what thou sayest, Lord Jesus; I pray, then, to God, in the name of Jesus, that he will give my mother the means of placing me in the Moravian school; I should like so much to continue to be taught. I pray unto thee already: but I will love thee still more."

The postmaster, being impressed by the queer address, opened the letter. It was read at a meeting of the Moravian Society, when the Baroness de la Leffe became the boy's patroness and sent him to the school to which he aspired to go. In the simplicity of that boy's heart and faith he believed that in answer to his prayer God would somehow open the way for him to go to that school.

Jack's Religious Opportunities.

With our churches, our libraries and prayer-meetings ashore, we do not realize, we dwellers of the land, how narrow are the sailor's literary and religious opportunities, bounded as they are, by the sides of his ship, until, reading some such little paragraph as this which appears in The Sailors' Magazine and Seaman's Friend:

On boarding a three-masted schooner, a chaplain reports, I found all hands aboard hard at work. I chatted for a short time as best I could and then went to see the captain. He holds services in his cabin whenever he can, and the small library on his table consisted of six religious works, two of which were Bibles and another Cruden's Concordance. We had a long talk, ending in prayer, in which he joined.

Husband and Wife.

In a recent article, Rev. John Hall points out a very common mistake in connection with the marriage service. He says: "We often read that clergyman declares the young couple man 'and wife.' The statement is according to most ceremonies heard, for in them the parties marrying are pronounced man and wife. This is, to say the least, a palpable misstatement of the correlation. It is marrying only one of them—the woman. She is pronounced a wife.

The man, however, is not pronounced a husband, what he really is, but a 'man,' just what he was before the event of the marriage.

Our Work in Cuba.

MOVED by sorrow over the disaster to the Maine and her gallant crew, and stirred to indignation by the sensational reports regarding that unfortunate event, some friends have written to us, impulsively inquiring whether, in the event of the responsibility for that occurrence proving to rest with Spain, the Christian people of our own land should still extend aid to the starving people of Cuba.

The question arises from a misconception of the circumstances. These Cuban concentrados are non-combatants—peaceful agriculturists and village laborers—who have taken no part in the wretched war which has devastated their country. They are innocent victims of a condition of affairs which they were powerless to prevent. Their cause is one that appeals, not to diplomacy, but to common humanity. Even suppose it should be found that the blowing up of the Maine was the act of Spaniards, would it improve the situation in the smallest degree were we to permit 50,000 or 100,000 human beings to starve, whom we might have saved—people who had nothing whatever to do with the disaster? Christ teaches us to deal kindly, even with our enemies; how much more should we deal tenderly with those who never had a thought of enmity against us, and whose very lives now hang upon our fidelity to His teachings? It is not because we are a powerful nation that these sufferers have appealed to us for succor, but because we are a humane, Christian people.

The path of duty lies clear before us; we have been called to save life in Cuba, to rescue the perishing and raise the helpless ones. In His Name, let us go forward, without hesitation, leaving the issues of war and peace in the hands of the great Disposer of events.

Are Disasters Multiplying.

WHEN it is not loneliness or death it is blizzard or cyclone. The wildest elements are let loose, and oft go church steeples and down go villages. Nevertheless, there are no more of these devastations in proportion to the world's number of inhabitants than there always have been, but the telegraph and the press associations gather them all up and put them before our eyes with all the particulars. Instead of knowing only that which goes on in one neighborhood, as in olden time, we have through wire and type a semi-omnipresence, and we are informed of all the important things that happen within ten thousand miles. As to hurricanes, Satan always was the prince of the power of the air, and when he wishes to take a ride, he gets astride a cyclone and with red spur of lightning urges on the wild courser until forests and villages are prostrated. But when vast regions of this country were uninhabited, a cyclone might caper around for a week and nobody heard of it.

In the year 1776, a whole convention of blizzards met in Dakota, and not one breath of their utterances was reported. In 1812, a hurricane flew a thousand miles through the Northwest, and only ruffled the fur of bulfalo and sunk an Indian's canoe and wrecked a bevy of wild pigeons. But now this country is getting so thoroughly peopled, that tornadoes have no room to play without upsetting something. If some evening a whirlwind takes a little circuit after tea in Georgia, the next morning we all know about it. A cyclone can have no privacy, and its every move is reported. Years ago, every morning and evening, we felt the sick pulse of the German Emperor at Berlin, while the old German Emperors like Otho and Conrad and Arnulf might have been sick ten years, and except a handful of people the world would have known nothing about it. Now, the harnessed lightning is by wire-bridle and bit turned this way and that and compelled to carry all kinds of tidings. No wonder the over-worked and tyrannized lightnings sometimes out of revenge strike and consume men and dwellings. Fame once meant being known by fifty thousand people. Fame now means being known by a hundred million. Charlemagne was not as widely spoken of in his time as now is some American pugilist. It is not because there are more accidents or more sicknesses or more deaths, or more occurrences, or more heroisms, or more suicides, or more catastrophes, but because such things are immediately reported, telegraphed and published.

Two Great Wrongs.

ALL good people on both sides the sea condemn the defamatory letter of the late Minister Plenipotentiary from Spain. He had again and again received the hospitality of President McKinley and pretended to be friendly, while at the same time guilty of the authorship of a most insulting communication concerning our Chief Magistrate. Our private opinion is that this foreign representative could hardly have been himself when he wrote it. Perhaps he had taken more apollinaris water or lemonade than was good for him. But certainly a whole sky full of thunder and lightning have been expended on the authorship of that letter. Not enough, however, has been said against the infamy of furnishing a private letter for publication. De Lome was a saint compared with the scoundrel who presented the letter for publication. But every day there are offenses of the same kind on a smaller or larger scale. We need a new law in this country making the publication of private letters a criminality.

Those who put private business letters, private professional letters or private home letters before eyes for which they were not intended, ought to be made to pay for the damages done. The publication of the De Lome letter was intended to make war between Spain and the United States, and, though that result was not brought about, the business interests of the United States and Europe were considerably affected. For the man who writes a bad private letter there ought to be reprehension; for him who publishes it there ought to be a penitentiary.

The Mystical Number Three.

IN this mystical number three, the essence of our life, spiritual and secular, reposes. Look where we will, three is forced upon us; and if it were expunged from our brains, we should be in mental and moral chaos. No number is so generally and significantly associated with religion. The Assyrians and Egyptians, as well as the modern Chinese, ascribe to it creative qualities. They say, "One produced Two, and Two produced Three, and Three produced all things"; and Bishop Whately declares that "Three in One is the deepest lying cipher of the universe." The ancient Assyrians had their triads; and the Hindoo three-fold combinations, like Vishnu, Brahma, and Siva are numerous; while the trinity of Christianity has its duplicate in the trinity of the Scandinavian and other mythologies. Consider, for instance, that of Greece, with its Three Furies, Three Fates, Three Graces, Three Sirens, Harpies, and other triplicate deities. Hades was guarded by the three-headed dog; and in its hall of justice there were three judges; even the riddle of the Sphinx was tripartite in character. The significance of this number in the Holy Scriptures, I leave to my readers to investigate, having no doubt that in such search they will find many a rich and gracious hour, and in other directions it will be sufficient to indicate its wonderful universality in order to induce a similar interest.

We, ourselves, are three-fold in nature—physical, intellectual, and spiritual. The world we live in has three zones—temperate, torrid, and arctic. The governments of this world are of three forms—despotisms, monarchies, and republics. Our bills for government must pass triumphantly three tribunals ere they become laws—the Legislature, the Senate, and the President. In our civic government we have Mayor, Alderman, and Councilor. The crier in the sittings of justice delivers his "Oyez" three times. The implements of writing are three—pens, ink, and paper. Our division of money is three—dollars, cents, mills; and in England, pounds, shillings, and pence. The monetary metals are three—gold, silver, and copper. The great distinctions of the Christian Church are three—the Roman, the Greek, and the Protestant. Its first offerings were three typical ones—gold, frankincense, and myrrh. Its peculiar attributes are three—faith, hope, and charity.

In mathematical formulas, the triangle may be taken as the basis of three-fold division; and of all symbolic figures, the triangle is the most popular, indeed, it has even a sacred character. In algebra, the importance of three is familiar and pervading. In mensuration, reckonings are of three kinds—linear, square, and cubic feet; and again, in long goods, three feet make a yard. In weights, we have three measures—Troy, Avoirdupois, and Pharmaceutical. In grammar, the genders, numbers, and persons are three; and its positive, comparative, and superlative rule is also three-fold. In logic, every proposition resolves itself into a three-fold form—the subject, the predicate, and the copula. In astronomy, we remember at once the three great powers—sun, moon, and stars. In nature, we have land, water, and the firmament, and again, earth, heaven, and hell. In agriculture, three is equally significant; and any farmer will supply, I have no doubt, many examples to those of annuals, biennials, and perennials; and in the matter of crops—grass, grains, and roots. Can any doctor explain the tertian ague, or why diseases are worse on the third day?

In literature, number three has a singular history; for no one can help observing how often men of genius fall naturally into threes. Here are a few examples—Æschylus, Sophocles, Euripides; Socrates, Plato, Aristotle; Dante, Petrarch, Bocaccio; Luther, Calvin, Knox; Shakespeare, Milton, Dryden; Addison, Pope, Johnson; Wordsworth, Southey, Coleridge; Scott, Moore, Byron; Longfellow, Whittier, Emerson; and the list could be indefinitely extended, not only in literature, but into the realms of both music, art, and theology.

Even the great books of the world set themselves in this number. Not to speak of the sacred books, there are three unapproachable epics—Homer's, Virgil's, and Milton's. Within the memory of all, there have been some excellent books set to this number; for instance, Trollope's "Three Clerks." Black's "Three Feathers." Jerome's "Three Men in a Boat." Kipling's "Soldiers Three."

If we come to every day life, nothing—unless it be bells—so constantly intrudes into our affairs. Such wonderful coincidence, and influence cannot be chance. Consciously or not, we are compelled to regard these little Arabic symbols with a kind of wondering veneration. Small as they are, they represent so much that is immense. Consider that we can put the whole population of America in numbers, on a linear inch, and the greatest army the world has ever seen, upon the width of a thumb nail. In a few seconds we can express in figures, time and distance, beyond the grasp of thought. Can any one fathom their power and fascination? and is it likely they are the work of chance, and express in such universal and persistent fashion, what is only fortuitous and without design? No! The power of numbers is one of the most remarkable evidences of the Omnipotent, who measured the heavens, and laid the foundations of earth.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Jewish population in France is about 77,200; Paris contains 42,000; Bordeaux, 3,000; the Eastern frontiers, about 19,000; scattered in the provinces, 13,200.

Mr. D. L. Moody began a series of revival services at Tampa, Fla., on February 22. Mr. A. Hanson, chairman of his committee, earnestly asks the prayers of our readers that God's blessing may follow the work that was begun and continued in prayer.

Rev. R. F. Y. Pierce has been holding a series of special meetings at the Carey avenue Baptist church, Chelsea, Mass. Many persons have already accepted Christ, and the interest is deepening. In addition to these meetings Mr. Pierce held special afternoon services with various pastors.

Rev. J. Manton Smith, the singing evangelist from Spurgeon's Tabernacle in London, is holding services in Toronto. The Jarvis Street Baptist Church and the Parliament Street Baptist Church are uniting in the work. Meetings are held every night and there is promise of a great blessing.

We are sorry to announce the death of Rev. Dr. William C. Cattell, formerly president of Lafayette College and corresponding secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Ministerial Relief. Dr. Cattell was seventy-one years of age. A very large circle of friends to whom he was endeared by his hearty, genial disposition, mourn his loss.

Lady Henry Somerset has addressed a letter to the Secretary of State for India withdrawing her indorsement of the military order which has created so many of her friends in the W. C. T. U. Lady Somerset wishes it to be understood that she now opposes the system to which she, to the astonishment of her American friends, some time ago gave her support.

Evangelist W. S. Weeden writes of the meetings recently held in the Baptist Temple, Brooklyn, in which he assisted Mr. Wm. P. Hall. "It was the most wonderful meeting I ever was in. Five hundred persons professed conversion." At the conclusion of those services Mr. Hall and Mr. Weeden went to Grace M. E. Church, Harlem, to hold a series of meetings.

A prominent pastor gives this as the result of his experience for the encouragement of churches who give liberally to the cause of missions: "I am more and more convinced that barrenness and leanness, both in things temporal and spiritual, in many of our churches come not from their poverty but from their selfishness. A giving church will be a growing church."

The membership of the Deputation of the American Board to China has been changed so that it now consists of Dr. Judson Smith, Colonel Charles A. Hopkins, of the Prudential Committee, and President Edward D. Eaton, of Beloit College. President Eaton goes as representing the West, and as specially qualified to study and report concerning the educational work of the Board.

The secularization of the Public School is being carried to an extreme point in Missouri. The attorney general of that State has just rendered an opinion holding that it is a violation of State law to have pupils recite the Lord's Prayer, or for teachers to read from the Bible at the opening exercises of public schools. Even the people who object to religious instruction in the schools will think this too radical.

An interesting series of meetings is mentioned by the Interior as having been held in Chicago. It says: "By special request the Rev. J. L. Withrow, D.D., pastor of the Third Church, preached last Sunday evening on the correct and incorrect way of reading the Bible, speaking particularly upon the fact that although there are numerable classes formed to study the Bible there is so little said concerning the better reading of the Bible in public."

Special services for policemen are held in New York every Sunday and Wednesday at 3:30 P.M., under the auspices of the New York Christian Police Association, at 235 West 13th street. A service is also held every alternate Thursday, at the same hour, at 5 West 125th street. One of the Christian policemen who aid devout men in carrying on these meetings writes the Interior that there is increasing interest on the part of the police in this work.

Rev. L. W. Munhall is holding united meetings at Vancouver, B. C. Eleven churches are taking part in the movement. At the St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church the meetings were deeply crowded in the afternoon and evening. Prof. Hall, who accompanies him, preached at overflow meetings at the Congregational Church. At one of Mr. Munhall's meetings one hundred and thirty persons rose to acknowledge the blessing they have received during the revival.

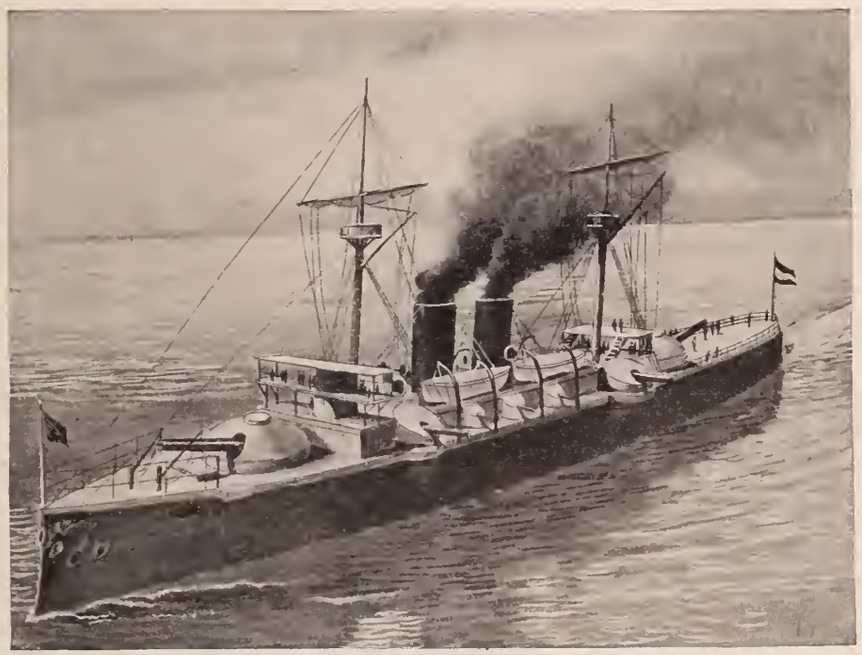
Twenty years ago, says Woman's Work for Woman, a lady interested in bee culture began to support a Bible-woman with her honey money. Year after year the annual sixty dollars was sent in as quietly as the bees gathered the sweets that earned it; and year after year the word "sweeter than honey" was taught afar by this faithful helper. Now the giver adds to this year's gift one thousand dollars for safe investment, that the interest may be used to keep on telling the good news unto the end.

Dr. P. B. Keskar, the Brahmin Christian physician from Sholapur, India, gave an address recently in the Congregational Church, of Ithaca, N. Y., on Christian work in India, especially that conducted by Miss Fowler among the women people. Dr. Keskar's addresses, which he generally delivers in his native costume, are extremely graphic and give a vivid idea of life in India. If any of our readers would contribute to his fund for the purchase of an organ for the Sunday School in Sholapur, of which he is superintendent, it would gladden the good doctor's heart. He has nearly sufficient to give the order to the American organ builder, but lacks about one-fifth of the price.

SPAIN SENDS A WARSHIP.

SPAIN'S formidable battleship, the Vizcaya, a picture of which appears on this page, arrives at our shores at a time when the national mind is sore with the tidings of calamity. All the courtesy due to the flag of a friendly power will be paid her at the various ports she may visit, but it must be confessed that she comes at an inopportune time. When, if her citizens had less self-control, her appearance might be regarded as a menace. She is a vessel of the first-class, heavily armored, carrying thirteen rapid-firing guns, of large pattern, fourteen of smaller calibre, and a force of more than four hundred men. But she is not to be treated as an enemy, and special precautions are being taken by the Government and the local police to prevent any irresponsible persons among our own citizens, or among Cubans resident in our cities, offering her any affront, or doing her mischief. The very suspicion that we may ourselves have suffered through the absence of such precautions, in the Bay of Havana, renders it incumbent upon us to see that no evil befall our Spanish visitor while she is in our waters. This suspicion, in spite of the mischievous efforts of malignant journalists to inflame the public mind, is too horrible to be entertained without the most cogent evidence. The captain of the Maine is careful in his statements to give no basis for it. He says that he was writing in his cabin on that fatal Tuesday night, when about a quarter of ten o'clock there was a fearful shock and a rending, tearing noise, indescribable in horror. All the men not on duty were in their bunks, but when the captain groped his way through the long passage to the deck, he found all who were still alive, there and ready for duty. He perceived by the light of the flames shooting up, forward, that there was no hope of saving the ship. There was no confusion, and perfect discipline was maintained. The first thing done was to flood the magazine containing the gun cotton, to prevent its explosion, and then the boats were lowered to save the officers and crew. Boats came to the ship, too, from the Spanish cruiser, Alphonso XII., which was anchored not far from the Maine. They succeeded in picking up thirty-seven of the wounded, who were thrown into the water by the explosion and were swimming. These were carried on board the cruiser, and the next day they were transferred to the hospitals of Havana. There they were in the kind and skilful hands of Miss Clara Barton, of the Red Cross, who was providentially at Havana with abundant means provided by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund. Captain Sigsbee believes that every one left alive on the Maine was taken off. He then went on board the Ward Line steamer City of Washington, which was anchored in the bay. At the present writing the list of life is set down at two officers and one hundred and forty-six men killed, and one-and-seven wounded, some of the latter fatally. This leaves seven men still unaccounted for, who must probably be added to the number of the dead. The calamity is appalling, and has called forth expressions of sympathy from the royal family of England, the Emperors of Russia and Germany, and other illustrious personages. The cause of the explosion at this date, is unknown. The President has appointed a court of investigation, which is now conducting an inquiry and will hear the reports of the divers, who have been down examining the wreck. Should they find that the plates of the vessel are bent outward, there will be good ground for believing that the explosion was the result of an accident on board the ship. If, on the other hand, the divers find that the plates are bent inward, the situation will be one requiring international explanation. It will indicate the work of a torpedo from outside the vessel, and we shall have a right to demand reparation. That, even in that case, the Spanish Government or its representatives in Cuba, would countenance, or connive, at so dastardly an act, we should refuse to believe without the clearest proof. It might be, however, that some malignant, irresponsible persons set a torpedo, and if so, the Cuban Government is in duty bound to exert itself for their detection. But until the court of investigation has finished its inquiries, the duty of all our citizens is to suspend judgment lest false and unjust charges be entertained. The advice of the inspired writer to individuals may well be commended to the whole nation:

Let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath (James 1 : 19).



THE SPANISH BATTLESHIP VIZCAYA NOW IN NEW YORK HARBOR.

Vacillation at a Wedding.

A Nebraska judge tells a strange story of a marriage at which he officiated. The young couple came to the court-house to be married, and as the judge was engaged, they whiled away the time of waiting, by listening to the trial at which he was presiding. It was a divorce case, and the wife's story of her wrongs so impressed the prospective bride, that when the judge came out of court, she refused to be married. The judge sympathized with the lover and expostulated with the bride. Eventually she yielded to the joint persuasions of her lover and the judge, but evidently with some foreboding. Such reluctance is seldom manifested at the altar, as the bride generally feels confident that her husband is the best of men. It is sometimes seen, however, but with still less reason by ministers and Christian workers who persuade people to become part of the bride of Christ, and can say to them:

Fear not, for thou shalt not be ashamed, neither be thou confounded; for thou shalt not be put to shame . . . for thy Maker is thy husband: the Lord of Hosts is his name (Isa. 54 : 4, 5).

No Common Law Wives.

Justice Rumsey of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court handed down a decision a few days ago, which may be a warning to many couples in various States. It appears that a policeman who had accumulated a considerable fortune died last year. As he died intestate, his brother claimed the property, but before it was awarded to him, a woman who had been the housekeeper of the deceased, set up a claim as the policeman's widow. She said that she had been married to him. There had been neither civil nor religious ceremony, but there had been a mutual agreement which the policeman had said constituted a common law marriage valid in law. The relation continued from 1876 to his death. That there was some basis for the policeman's contention was evident from the fact that the lower courts admitted the woman's claim; but the Supreme Court reversed the decision and Justice Rumsey said that the Court would not regard as a marriage, an agreement that had not been openly declared as a marriage during the lifetime of both parties. The decision is just and it may prevent litigation and immorality in the future. There are some people who act in the same was as to the salvation of their souls. They think that they can be secret disciples and so avoid the odium of confessing Christ before men, and yet be recognized as his at the last; but they indulge the hope in spite of explicit warning.

Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed when he cometh in glory (Mark 8 : 38).

A Double Rescue.

A mounted policeman of Brooklyn, N. Y., was trying a horse recently on the New Lots Road, when he saw a boy lying on the railroad track. Putting spurs to his horse, he reached him and dragged him off the track when the locomotive was but a few yards distant. The boy was unconscious, and, supposing him to be in a critical condition, the policeman turned in an ambulance call. The ambulance took the boy to St. Mary's Hospital, where it was found that he was under the influence of a deadly poison. After working over him for more than an hour, the boy recovered consciousness. He said he had been to the woods looking for horse-radish and had eaten a part of one of the roots he dug up. Coming back along the track he had felt dizzy and remembered no more. The surgeon said that the boy must have eaten aconite, and if he had not been treated as early as he was, would have died. It is certain that the train would have killed him in any case, so the policeman's taking him from the track and sending him to the hospital saved a life doubly imperilled. It is such a two-fold rescue that the soul receives through Christ. It needs to be saved not only from punishment, but from the effects of the sin which poisons its nature, and from both these Christ saves.

Who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himself a peculiar people (Titus 2 : 14).

Buried in the Snow.

A promising boy, in Brooklyn, N. Y., lost his life in the recent snowstorm. He and two other boys worked hard collecting the snow from the yards of two adjoining houses and packing it against a fence. When they finished, they had a mound about six feet high and eight feet in circumference. The oldest boy of the three who was fourteen years of age then began excavating, to turn the mound into a snow house. It was hard work getting the snow from the interior through the aperture that was to be the door. He was just putting the finishing touches by levelling the floor, when the other boys saw the side wall bulge and a minute afterwards, the roof fell in. They raised a cry for help and a man and woman from one of the houses heard. They and the two boys soon had the snow removed from his head and shoulders, but it was too late. The poor boy had been under it long enough to lose his life. He had been suffocated in the few minutes that elapsed before he was released. The death of their playmate must have been a shock to the other two boys. It may be hoped that when they grow up, the memory of the calamity will be of some use to them and that they will avoid the habit which Christ said had effects like the one that they witnessed.

He that heareth and doeth not is like a man that without a foundation built a house upon the earth and immediately it fell and the ruin of that house was great (Luke, 6 : 49).

Moulding Marble.

A press dispatch from Montreal reports some interesting experiments which are being made in the science department of McGill University. The experiments tend to show that even a substance as hard and brittle as marble, may, under certain conditions, be moulded like clay. Miniature columns of marble or granite have been placed in sheaths of iron and submitted to graduated and long-continued pressure. The marble has shortened and thickened and bulged so as to swell the iron sheath. The iron then being cut away, the marble, no longer cylindrical but greatly altered in shape, remains solid and brittle as before. No increase of temperature or other agency than the pressure is applied. It has been conclusively shown by actual test that the marble does not break, as it was predicted it would, under the gigantic pressure, but yields like clay and when the pressure is removed retains its shape and consistency. The news is a genuine surprise. It was generally believed that the only way in which marble could be made to change its shape was by breaking or cutting; but these experiments show that under pressure it will change its shape while remaining hard. This sometimes happens with men, whose hearts are often compared to marble. They can change their attitude toward Christianity and even change their reputation by changing their habits and personal associations; but it is God only who can change their nature.

I will take the stony heart out of your flesh and give you a heart of flesh (Ezek. 36 : 26).

Prisoners Escape.

A press dispatch from Dallas, Tex., reports that one day lately when the jailer and his assistants at Texarkana went to make their morning rounds they were astonished to find every cell empty. Eighteen prisoners had sawed and dug their way out during the previous night. A dozen or more iron bars had been bent or broken in different parts of the prison and the inmates of the cells had made their way through the corridors to a large opening that had been dug through a stone wall twenty-two inches thick. When the dispatch was sent, no tidings had been obtained of the escaped prisoners, though an organized search had been made for them. There had evidently been a regular plot made, otherwise all the eighteen prisoners would not have fixed on the same night to make their escape. They probably knew that any man getting out of his cell that night would find a way of escape under the wall ready for him. It seems that the information, however conveyed, was promptly acted on. Every man in the prison availed himself of it. It is much to be wished that similar decision and promptitude were shown by all who hear the message that Christ has made a way of escape for Satan's captives.

Let us therefore fear lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it (Heb. 4 : 1).

OUR LIFE-SAVING WORK IN CUBA!

CLARA BARTON SENDS WORDS OF GREETING THROUGH THE CHRISTIAN HERALD TO THE WOMEN OF AMERICA.

OUR RELIEF FUND NOW $60,000.

The Red Cross Doing Splendid Service Among the Sick and Starving—Our Supplies Being Safely Received and Promptly Distributed—Clara Barton at the Bedside of Our Wounded Sailors—Her Inspiring Letters from the Field.

CUBA has been the absorbing topic during the week. The sad disaster to the Maine has added to the suffering now prevailing there and increased the labors of the President of the Red Cross and her corps of nurses. That THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in behalf of the Relief Fund contributors should have been led to send Clara Barton to Cuba to take command of the corps of skilled nurses, whom Gen. Lee had already engaged, now appears to have been the marvelous work of that beneficent Providence which overrules all things for ultimate good. Miss Barton's aids are young women of the best families in Havana, who are proving wonderfully efficient and sympathetic in their duties. Her letters below give an idea of the energy with which this remarkable Christian woman is directing the work of relief among the sick and suffering. The experienced Red Cross coadjutors whose presence she requests have already been sent to Havana, and are now working side by side with her in the field. Concerning her methods of work a correspondent writes:

Miss Barton expects to soon have the work in Havana fully systemized, when she will start for the smaller towns, where the conditions are even more terrible than here. A hospital will be secured at once, and many delicacies and medical supplies are being gathered for use in the hospital. Food and other necessaries have already been sent to fifteen to small places, and the misery in Havana is somewhat alleviated. Half a million men, women and children are yet starving, and every penny forwarded goes to the right spot.

That Miss Barton fully realizes the importance of the work entrusted to her, is shown by the following letters received during the week:

HAVANA, Cuba, Feb. 11.

Dear Mr. Klopsch:

Your letter inclosing a check for five thousand dollars ($5,000) awaited me at the Consulate, for which I pray you to accept my heartfelt thanks in behalf of the pitiful objects of human suffering and woe for whose attempted relief it is given.

In the three days since our landing, we have made the rounds of the city, visited every point of note where the "reconcentrados" and poor are gathered, the various hospitals so far as possible, and all places where the relief goods sent by America are stored and disposed of in distribution. You will understand that in a city of three hundred thousand inhabitants, with the conditions prevailing here, this occupation has not left the most ample time in which to discover either conditions or impression.

Consul General Lee is doing all he can do, and more than could reasonably be expected of one man to accomplish. We boarded the Vigilancia and saw the lighters take away the splendid gifts of the American people, between fifty and sixty tons weight, and only wished the donors themselves could see the cheering and beautiful sight as we saw it—it seemed to us that the angels saw it and were glad.

To-morrow, or Sunday we shall visit points of distribution of American relief for several of the surrounding villages, and hope with the gifts of each succeeding week to reach farther and farther, until as in Armenia we shall have completed the circuit from center to circumference.

There is great need of clothing. Thin cabin, cotton clothing, second-hand garments are the most needed. No one appears to have entering church, and many of the little children have not one article of clothing of any kind, particularly, comparatively speaking, is to be found. They will not long suffer from cold, but some protection from the sunshine and would much desirable. Please say to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, that many country of country workers, that even themselves do not fully realize the good the Christ the mission they have so grandly accepted.

Very sincerely yours,
CLARA BARTON

In a letter to the Relief Committee, Miss Barton makes a full and explicit statement of her plans. She writes:

"In regard to the hospital matter, what and who are needed to set it running in good order; there are said to be thousands of children in the streets, or gathered into wretched dens, or so-called hospitals in all stages of suffering that can be developed from hunger, malaria, and neglect. We have seen the worst of the great gatherings, and jointly with Gen. Lee have decided that a hospital for them should be opened at once. Mr. Elwell and I have examined buildings for the purpose, decided upon one, which we will commence to fit up at once. Will go to work in good Red Cross fashion to make up what is practically needed for the multitude. I believe I must cable you at once whom I must need, and who, on the spot, and working together, will change the entire aspect of Cuban horrors. We do not need an army, but I want my own helpers: Dr. Hubbell (Field Agent), Dr. and Mrs. Lesser, Dr. Egan and Mr. McDowell (a Grand Army man.) With these helpers, added to ourselves, I believe we cannot only change the aspect of things in Havana, but reach the greatest destitution of the island.

"Goods are splendidly handled by the steamship companies. There is no loose joint in anything they do. When they turn them over to the committee here, they are taken into a warehouse and kept under closest scrutiny, so that there may not be the slightest chance for dishonesty."

This assurance will be received with gratification by many readers.

During the dark and sorrowful days that followed the disaster on the Maine, the attention of the Red Cross workers was divided between the sick reconcentrados and our gallant "boys in blue," many of whom lay wounded into death. In the Havana hospitals. Within a few hours after the disaster, and as soon as the news reached New York, Dr. Klopsch, in behalf of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, cabled to Miss Clara Barton, urging her to give immediate attention to the injured sailors, and to spare neither effort nor expense in their behalf. Promptly came the answering cablegram:

"I am with the wounded.
BARTON."

These few words brought the gratifying assurance that this noble woman, whose whole life has been a Christ-like mission of mercy, was beside the sufferers, with her staff, and that many a pain-racked pillow was made smoother and many a poor, shattered body soothed by these ministrations. Of those brave men there were doubtless many whose last look rested upon the calm, saint-like faces of the ministering angels of the Red Cross, as they knelt by the hospital beds and commended the souls of the sufferers to Divine mercy.

Information received withing the last few days states that "the destitution and starvation continue to increase." In some of the towns remote from Havana, crowds have appeared at the consulates, appealing for food. While every effort is being made to distribute the relief as widely and effectively as possible, it is known that there are still many places where no relief has yet been received. All the consular reports agree as to the dire need of such places and the importance of urging forward the relief work to save life. Congress has decided to examine the Consular reports, and it is expected that a flood of official light will soon be cast upon this, the darkest spectacle of the closing years of the century. Concerning these Consular reports, Mr. H. V. Boynton writes, that they will unquestionably show that there has been no exaggeration, whatever, in the published accounts in the press, and that the appalling death lists from starvation, as well as the present terrible destitution are grim realities. He adds: "Congressmen who have read these Consular reports declare that they will astound and horrify the country."

The official journal of Havana, La Lucha, in a recent issue, admits "the critical situation of the increased number of persons whom the concentration left without homes and means of living." It declares that the official measures taken for their relief have thus far been without result.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund is now nearly $60,000. Remittances are being made regularly through the Central Relief Committee. A letter from the Committee, received last week, reads as follows:

THE CENTRAL CUBAN RELIEF COMMITTEE
(Appointed by the President of the United States)
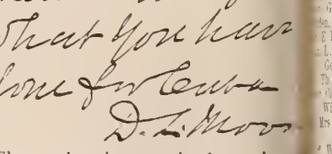
NEW YORK, February 19, 18[98].

Dear Mr. Klopsch:—I beg to acknowledge receipt, in the name of this Committee, your check of ten thousand dollars ($10,000), being the fifth remittance toward the relief of the suffering people in Cuba. Please accept the thanks of this Committee for the same.

Very truly yours,
STEPHEN E. BARTON,
Treasurer.

One of the warmest advocates of the Cuban relief movement is Mr. D. L. Moody, the well-known evangelist, who has repeatedly urged upon his great Gospel audiences the duty of aiding in this Christ-like work. Our readers will remember that at the recent revival gatherings in Carnegie Hall, the audience responding to the evangelist's eloquent appeal, gave $700 to the cause. Mr. Moody sends this stirring message:



These cheering words from the great evangelist will be welcomed by all who are helping to save life in Cuba.

Rev. J. O. Wilson, St. Andrew's M. E. Church, New York, writes:

Your appeal for the starving Cubans is worthy THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and may God reward your generous interest in the poor sufferers! I enclose ten dollars to [illegible] order, and only wish I could make it a thousand.

Rev. R. G. Hobbs, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Special Commissioner, who accompanied the Everett on her relief trip to India, writes from Jacksonville, Fla.:

You certainly are doing a magnificent work in relieving the suffering of the stricken people of that war-devastated island. It would be inhuman for the American people to stand by and to see thousands starve and perish with hunger when they are within so short a distance of this land of plenty. I only wish I could do something to help you in that work.

Previous to last week's issue, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD printed acknowledgments of contributions to the Fund to the extent of $6,960.47. The sum total of the contributions received each week will hereafter appear in the issue of the week following. The contributions acknowledged in last week's issue by States, are given in the table below:

CLARA BARTON'S MESSAGE TO THE WOMEN OF AMERICA.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Havana Cuba Sixteenth Feb, 1898

Dear Mr. Klopsch,

Tell your readers that I feel like repeating, as I see what they are doing—"Many daughters have done virtuously but thou excellest them all,"

Truly Clara Barton.

The foregoing letter reads:

Dear Mr. Klopsch: Havana, Cuba, Feb. 16, 1898.

Tell your readers that I feel like repeating, as I see what they are doing: "Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all."

Truly, CLARA BARTON.

HELPFUL ANECDOTES

By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D.

THE BEAUTY OF HOLINESS.

THERE is no path in life so dark but what the Christian graces, growing in the garden of the heart, may make the soul like an oasis in the desert.

The keeper of the Point Pinas lighthouse at Monterey, on the Pacific Coast, is a woman. When Mrs. Fish entered upon the duties of her office, she found the lighthouse a dreary abode, situated as it was far from any neighboring houses, upon the gray ocean sands. She at once began transforming it into a more homelike spot. Within she added warm draperies, rare china, and other dainty furnishings. Without she enclosed a large garden, and made it a brilliant, fragrant spot. About its boundaries she planted the native cypress, which is found nowhere else in the world. Behind these sheltering trees, she made a broad velvety lawn, and planted tea roses, geraniums, and other fragrant flowers. On the warm, sunny days that come in such quick succession there, this garden, only ninety feet above the sea, and overlooking the vast, blue Pacific, is one of the prettiest, most romantic and sightly places on the Coast. But more careful than of all else is Mrs. Fish, of the green light entrusted to her care. Punctual to the moment does the lamp always send its ray out across the water, and as punctually is extinguished when the stronger light of day appears.

The Loss of Manhood.

One of the greatest tragedies of human life is the way sin, when persisted in, robs its victim of the free spirit of manhood. A man comes at last to hug his chains and no longer aspires to the free air of a noble life.

Frank Jackson, a negro serving a twenty-year sentence in the Missouri Penitentiary, has refused to accept a pardon offered him by the Governor of the State. On last Thanksgiving day, Governor Stephens offered to give the man a pardon, as a Thanksgiving present according to the custom of selecting one from among the prisoners for clemency, at that season. The prisoner replied that he would prefer to continue his stay in the penitentiary. He gave as his reason that he had no friends, no money, and could find no employment. He is still a prisoner.

Traces of the Divine Image.

One is often astonished to see men whose lives are wicked and openly profane and ungodly, who will still frequent the house of God, and be often moved by some simple story of affection, or some song of the old worship of their childhood. Surely there are traces of the divine image not yet altogether destroyed by the life of sin.

Wild dogs are overrunning the mountain and valley country along the line between the New Mexico and Apache Country, Arizona. These animals are apparently the descendants of domesticated dogs that have mingled with the mountain wolves until they have produced a new variety—part wolf and part dog. The features have the head and shoulders of the bird dog, with the body, movement, and characteristics of the gray mountain wolf. They are said to be about a hundred pounds in weight, and in color they are of an ashen gray, with patches of long black hair. A horseman they will follow for miles through the forests, but their action is apparently the survival of the domestic dog's instinct. They sometimes visit isolated ranches, and when they do the ranches dogs, unless very much attached to their master, are apt to go away with the wild dogs.

Dormant Seeds.

Often on the frontier, when the plow runs deep in the virgin soil it turns up buried seeds that grow and blossom in a culture before entirely unknown in the region. So, it is probable that in all our hearts and minds there are dormant possibilities which only require the proper circumstances to cause them to burst into unexpected development.

About twenty years ago a steam packet company, of Liverpool, wished to buy a piece of land, which was owned by a "stay-at-home sister," as her neighbors described her. She sold her land at a very low price, but insisted upon a clause being inserted in the agreement giving her the right at any time during her life to travel with a companion in any of the company's vessels.

When the agreement was closed, she sold her furniture and went on board the first outgoing ship belonging to the packet company. For years this wise spinster lived nearly all the time upon one ship or another, frequently accompanied by a companion, according to the agreement. This was always a person who otherwise would have been a regular passenger, but who purchased her ticket at reduced rates by paying the spinster instead of the packet company. The company offered her more than twice the value of the land if she would give up her privilege; but this she would not do. Her reply was: "You got the land cheap, and I like sailing; so you ought to be satisfied."

Giving Account for Our Talents.

In childhood and youth we are all furnished with a certain hopefulness and courage that belong to innocence, and talents that are our peculiar trust. When life is over we must face these again and give an account as to how we have used them.

A touching and poetical custom prevails in the Welsch-Tyrol. When a young maiden is about to be married, immediately before she steps across the threshold of her old home, on her way to church, her mother solemnly gives her a new pocket-handkerchief. The bride holds it in her hand throughout the marriage ceremony, using it to wipe away her tears. As soon as the marriage festivities are ended the young wife lays the handkerchief aside in her linen-closet, and there it remains as long as she lives. Nothing could induce a Tyrolese wife to use this sacred handkerchief. It may be half a century, or longer, before it is taken from its place to fulfil the second and last part of its mission. When the wife dies, perhaps as a gray old grandmother, the loving hands of the next-of-kin place the bridal handkerchief over the face of the dead and it is buried with her in the grave.

True Courtesy.

There is no sweeter grace to soften the rough edges of daily life than the grace of courtesy. It sits with great beauty on strong characters.

Martha Littlefield Phillips, a great granddaughter of General Nathaniel Greene, of Revolutionary times, relates a very interesting story of Washington, which is new.

Early in a bright December morning, a droll-looking old countryman called to see the President. In the midst of their interview, breakfast was announced, and the President invited the visitor, as was his hospitable habit, on such occasions, to a seat beside him at the table. The visitor drank his coffee from his saucer; but lest any grief should come to the snowy damask, he laboriously scraped the bottom of his cup on the saucer's edge before setting it down on the tablecloth. He did this with such audible vigor that it attracted the attention of the other guests, among whom were several young people, always on the alert for occasions of laughter. These young folks were so indiscreet as to allow their amusement to become obvious. General Washington took in the situation, and immediately adopted his visitor's method of drinking his coffee, making the scrape even more pronounced than the one he produced. The disposition to laugh was quenched at once.

Christian Graces in the Midst of Worldliness

There is no place to which the child of God may be led in the path of duty, so full of temptation, or so unpropitious to righteousness, but that the graces of the Spirit may blossom and rebuke the wickedness surrounding them.

John Muir, the great California naturalist, declares that the most unspoiled natural flower gardens of the continent are on the vast tundras of Alaska. Every summer they extend smooth, even undulating, continuous beds of flowers and leaves from about latitude sixty-two degrees, to the shores of the Arctic Ocean. Tenderly tucked in beneath downy snow, through the huge white winter, these arctic flowers, make haste to bloom in the Spring without trying to grow tall, though some rise high enough to ripple and wave in the wind, and display masses of color—yellow, purple and blue—so rich that they look like beds of rainbows, and are visible miles and smile away.

An evangelistic band of ten students from Rochester, N. Y., Seminary, has given its services free to the churches of the city on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sundays all day, and many of the churches have been revived by their labors.

A Trained Nurse

Tells How Scrofula May be Entirely Cured.

Was Troubled for Seven Years with This Painful Disease.

Do not allow scrofula taints to develop in your blood. If you would be free from painful skin disease, take Hood's Sarsaparilla at the first indication of impure blood and thoroughly eradicate every vestige of scrofula.

"I was troubled from the time I was 9 years old until I was 16 with what the doctors called scrofula. My back was a mass of sores. I took medicines without avail and was given up as incurable. I finally began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and continued its use until I was entirely cured. I am now well and strong. As I am a trained nurse I have an opportunity to note many cases of eczema and other blood diseases cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla."

J. D. TORREY, Lillydale, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Consumption

Will SCOTT'S EMULSION cure consumption? Yes and no. Will it cure every case? No. What cases will it cure then? Those in their earlier stages, especially in young people. We make no exaggerated claims, but we have positive evidence that the early use of

of Cod-liver oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda in these cases results in a positive cure to a large number. In advanced cases, however, where a cure is impossible, this well-known remedy should be relied upon to prolong life surprisingly.

Edward J. Doyle's Big Strike.

Edward J. Doyle, who recently gave up his position as foreman of the printing office, has gone out, without previous experience, into the state and we hear, on good authority, is making $10.00 to $25.00 every day, giving public entertainments with the New Gem Talking Machine Outfit. The complete outfit including the Talking Machine, Records, Show Bill Posters, Tickets, Dates, and all was sent to him C. O. D. $22.25. He recently sent his assistant South with the new Klondike Picture Panorama and Lecture Outfit which he bought complete for $18.75, and this is doing even better than the Talking Machine entertainment. He now has an entirely new Moving Living Picture Entertainment outfit ready, which cost him complete just $125.00, and he expects to start it in another direction shortly. Mr. Doyle certainly stepped at once from a mechanic's position to a quick road to fortune by taking advantage of the new inventions of the day, and his success proves there is money in the country and the people are interested in these new wonder inventions. Why don't the thousands of our young men, now out of employment, have a little more enterprise and thus carve their own way to fortune. SEARS, ROEBUCK & Co., Chicago, furnish any of these outfits to anyone on examination before paying, and send the most complete catalogues on the subject free on application, if you will name the catalogue you want.

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

A prominent physician writes:

Dear Sirs:—Replying to yours on the use of Tartarlithine as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that the verdict is unanimous in its favor. I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity and promptness with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished for years.

BELGIAN MISSION WORK.

The Evangelical Society and its Wide Field of Gospel Propagation.

THE largest body of Protestants in Belgium is the "Protestant Union," which is recognized and supported by the State. Its annual synod consists of all the preachers and a number of the lay delegates of every congregation. In 1835, the Belgian Evangelical Society was organized in Brussels, after the model of the great missionary organizations of Paris and Geneva and a large number of congregations have been established, the number being increased almost every year.

GENERAL MISSIONARY ASSEMBLY AT COURCELLES, BELGIUM.

Our photograph, which shows a notable gathering of these missionary workers at Courcelles, Belgium, was received from a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Mr. Jules Charlier, of McDonald, Pa., who writes:

This photograph represents the general assembly held in 1897 at Courcelles. I am pleased to send you a report of the church, which is the missionary church of Belgium. Will you please give it place in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

In the accompanying report it is shown that the religious organization represented by this assembly maintains at present thirty-two churches and stations, twenty-nine preachers and evangelists, fifty-nine Sunday Schools, eight Bible lecturers, five colporteurs, seventy-five laymen who preside at religious meetings, in addition to which it is doing a great amount of good by holding services at places which are not regular stations; and which have no churches, but where services are held in hired halls. The Society supports the widows and orphans of dead pastors, provides an asylum for aged men, and carries on mission work in many heathen lands. The home territory covered consists of the Provinces of Brabant, Hainaut, Liege, Namur, and the Flemish section in which are Antwerp, Brussels, Gand, and Ostend. The Societe Evangelique began to establish congregations, churches and schools, and to send out preachers, evangelists, colporteurs, and Bible lecturers, in 1835. Two of the Protestant Union's congregations (those of Mary Hoorbecke, near Ghent, and Dour, in Hennegan,) date from the Reformation. In 1886 the non-Catholic population of Belgium was estimated at almost 18,000 out of a total population of about 4,500,000, an estimate which was probably too low. There are at least 25,000 Protestants in Belgium now. Of late years the Protestants have increased in number far more rapidly than the Catholics.

THE MIND OF CHRIST.

An Example of Self-sacrifice and Love to all His Followers. Phil. 2: 3-8.

Our method of education and the associations of business and personal life have encouraged a spirit of competition and of self-love which is alien to the teachings of Christ. His example of self-sacrifice, of meekness and of care for others seems in these days to have lost its power. Even in school life the boy's attainments are not estimated on their merits but by the attainments of others. It is not the percentage that he gets that wins him congratulation, but the fact that none of the other boys in his class have so high a marking. The man follows the same rule. He is not satisfied with getting on, unless he gets on better than others do. Emulation has become rivalry, and there is more of envy than of love in our hearts. In the church, from which it ought surely to be excluded, it is visible. An instance has been known of an evangelist feeling gloomy when he heard that another evangelist had gathered in a large harvest of souls. Instead of rejoicing and praising God for the blessing, he has felt that his own reputation is in eclipse and that his standing in the religious community is lowered. The apostle points out that this is not the spirit of Christ. It was not of himself, or of his own comfort, or of his own exaltation that Jesus thought. Though he was divine, he laid aside his majesty and became a servant that he might redeem the world. When we think of that wonderful life, of its poor surroundings, of its humiliations, of the insults heaped upon him, we wonder how he could have borne it. The remembrance of it ought to restrain our rising anger when we are hurt or wronged. We talk of our rights and are indignant if one of them is infringed; we expect respect and deference and are very sensitive to criticism and reproof. But in this we do not show the mind that was in Christ. The jealousy and envy which we feel had no place in him. It was of the world and of sinful men that he thought, not of himself. His sweet compassion for the Magdalen who wept over his feet, for the publican, and even for the woman taken in her sin, his extenuation of the Roman soldiers who nailed him to the cross, all show that divine self-forgetfulness which it is so hard for us to practise.

DANGER IN SODA.

Serious Results Sometimes Follow Its Excessive Use.

Common soda is all right in its place and indispensable in the kitchen and for cooking and washing purposes, but it was never intended for a medicine, and people who use it as such will some day regret it.

We refer to the common use of soda to relieve heartburn or sour stomach, a habit which thousands of people practice almost daily, and one which is fraught with danger; moreover, the soda only gives temporary relief, and in the end the stomach trouble gets worse and worse.

The soda acts as a mechanical irritant to the walls of the stomach and bowels, and cases are on record where it accumulated in the intestines, causing death by inflammation or peritonitis.

Dr. Harlandson recommends as the safest and surest cure for sour stomach (acid dyspepsia) an excellent preparation sold by druggists under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. These tablets are large 20-gram lozenges, very pleasant to taste and contain the natural acids, peptones, and digestive elements essential to good digestion, and when taken after meals they digest the food perfectly and promptly before it has time to ferment, sour and poison the blood and nervous system.

Dr. Wuerth states that he invariably uses Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in all cases of stomach derangements and finds them a certain cure, not only for sour stomach, but by promptly digesting the food they create a healthy appetite, increase flesh and strengthen the action of the heart and liver. They are not a cathartic, but intended only for stomach disease and weakness, and will be found reliable in any stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach. All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50 cts. per package.

A little book describing all forms of stomach weakness and their cure mailed free by addressing the Stuart Co. of Marshall, Mich.

Some good quick exercise, producing perspiration enough to bring the impurities to the surface of the skin, a rub with a rough towel, a scrub with Ivory Soap, a dash of cold water and she is cleansed and beautified.

With nerves braced and muscles hardened, she feels that she is indeed a new woman.

Ivory Soap because of its purity, its quick action, its easy rinsing quality, and the smooth pleasant sensation it leaves, is the favorite soap for the bath.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

A Husband's Relations—Home Quarrels—Holy Lives—Earning and Spending.

IT must be admitted that it is not always easy for a wife to live comfortably with her husband's relations, especially if they have to form part of the family, and if they are of an interfering disposition one may safely predict "breakers ahead!" It is particularly hard for a wife to observe that her husband's care of his own people, his solicitude on their account exceeds the devotion he gives to her though, when it is a case of love when to his mother, I think she should remember that we all owe reverence to age, and that a man who has anything good in him always venerates and tenderly cares for the mother who bore him, and that his doing this does not in any way mean that he does not also love his wife.

The thing I notice in reading your letter dear A., for you have been very open and unreserved, and that is that all went well with you until your sister-in-law took up her abode in the house. As apparently this lady only came as a visitor in the first place, and as she has drifted into a habit of staying, and her stay has introduced a spirit of contention into a once happy household, why not, gently and firmly, have it out with her. In this world the price of peace is sometimes only paid by the sword.

Men are always opposed to petty quarreling and disputing in the home, and very properly. Home is their asylum from the world, their retreat, their refuge, their shelter from every rude assault. Their wives are so much a part of themselves that a spirit of rough candor sometimes animates their conduct, and they say disagreeable and almost brutal things to those they honestly love, without being quite aware of what they are doing. Point out to your sister-in-law that you are willing to have her now and then as a guest, that you wish her to feel free to visit her mother and her brother at appropriate intervals, but that you do not wish her to live with you, and, in fact, cannot consent to it any longer.

Much sadder is the case of Delphine, whose own sister, against the plainest of speech and remonstrance, persists in remaining in her family, where she is a source of much trouble and many jars. There are little children here, and it is very bad for them to witness bickering and wretchedness, and the strained state of feeling between their parents, all on account of this indiscreet young woman, whose delicacy of feeling is at a low ebb.

I advise you, Delphine, having done everything you can in the case, to show great patience, and to pray a great deal. It would seem as if your own sister would listen to you, but if not, then conquer the situation by sweetness of demeanor and by absence of jealousy. And pray. "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." Pray without ceasing. Pray about the petty trials and irritations. Ask God to help you, and believe that he means what he says when he declares to you from the sky above your head, "As thy day my strength shall be."

Now for a pleasanter subject. Margaret asks how often one should read the Bible through. My dear child, I cannot tell you definitely, nor can anybody else, but at least once a year during every year of your life. I advise constant, frequent, steady forging ahead in the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, omitting no chapter or verse. And, besides, I counsel reading the Bible by topics, taking a subject as faith, service, love, friendship, and finding out all the texts which bear on that. Then, I would read the Bible, if I were you, for its literary style, which is most wonderful, and more than all else, because it is God's letter written for you. His personal message to your heart.

I cannot reply to your question. Harry P., and let me say how I rejoice to have a young man among my friends in council, better than by a quotation from Henry Drummond. You ask whether holiness is an obligation in the Christian life. Holiness is just wholeness. It is offering to God the daily life without spot or blemish of permitted or wilful sin, even as in old days the Hebrew offered for his Lord's approval the lamb without blemish. Drummond says: "God's one desire for the whole earth is that it should be holy, just because he is holy. The best he can do with men is to make them like himself. To take even the lowest ground, we allow no ornaments in our house which are not lovely and pleasant to the eye. We have no business to live in God's world, and make of ourselves discordant notes in the music of the universe. As he who hath called you is holy, so be ye holy."

Of all the questions discussed around our hearth, none ever arouses more interest than that of earning and spending. Money is important to everybody. One excellent correspondent sent the other day a sensible letter, which I asked the minister's wife to read aloud, and she did so, while the rest of us listened. Said this friend:

"When I was a very young girl I had a silver sixpense given me, which I exchanged for six copper cents. These I divided in three parts. One part for myself, one for some one else, and one for Sunday-school collection. Later on for ten years I earned from ten to fifteen dollars a week in a printing office. I always divided my earnings in thirds, one for myself, one for expenses, one for profits. I never allowed myself to encroach on either part, and still later I had a neat sum in the savings bank. I don't see how any one, not the head of a family, can improve on that plan. I do not approve of spending all my money for myself. I do not approve of making bills of expense, and robbing myself to pay the bills, and I must have something for charity and profit. Do you not think my plan a good one to place before the young wage-earners?"

On the whole, I will not tell you just now what we said in this letter. I'll ask you to write your own views about saving and spending and giving away. And will you please write on the outside of your envelope the words: "For Friends in Council," addressing it, not to me, but to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

GOD'S BROAD LOVE.

Narrow Views Limiting the Sphere of the Divine Favor Inconsistent With the Christian Faith. Acts 10: 11-20

Describing afterwards the trance, which is the subject for the Epworth League in the week beginning March 13, Peter states that God was teaching him a lesson by it. It was not a vision, which implies the actual existence of the things present to the eye, but a trance, or waking dream. In the trance, Peter was invited, evidently by a voice which he believed to proceed from God himself, to do something prohibited by the law. He does not obey even God, priding himself on his personal and lifelong obedience to the law. That was a curious but not uncommon attitude of mind, which would set its own opinion and practice above a direct command of God. He clung to the righteousness he had under the law and was not willing to give it up, even to please God. Evidently he stood in need of teaching and he received it. Primarily it taught him that he must not despise the Gentiles. The Jew was apt to do this. He held himself as one peculiarly chosen of God and he was right, but he must not suppose that others were shut out of the divine favor. Even in our day the same spirit manifests itself. There are Christians who at the most sacred and tender sacrament of our religion will not associate with other Christians who love the Lord and desire to celebrate his dying love. Spiritual pride and self-righteousness could not go further than this. One would have thought that it was sufficient for God to show one man his error in this matter. When we despise the negro, or shrink from contact with the depraved, we show our need of the same lesson. The drunkard, the harlot and the criminal have reason to complain that Christ's followers still are ignorant of the truth that God showed Peter in his trance. They ought to feel that Christians, while hating and loathing sin, love the sinners and would gladly help them to reform and quit their sin. Instead of this, there is pride and self-congratulation that we are not as other men who have fallen into sin, or do not see the truth as we see it. The hard, uncharitable, censorious spirit is alien to the spirit of Christianity and must be eliminated before we can become like God who is kind to the unthankful and the evil.

PROPORTIONATE WORK.

How to Keep the Pledge of the Christian Endeavor Society. Matt. 25: 14-30.

Too much importance cannot be given to the rules of service our Lord gives in this parable of the Talents. Of all the parables, this is the one that most concerns the conduct of those who bear his name. The Christian Endeavor Society is nothing more than a systematized, organized effort to turn these rules and principles into action. A careful study of the parable shows that the three trusts of the talents—five, two and one—are not symbols of mental or spiritual capacity. Our endowments lie back of the trust. "To every man according to his several ability" was the principle of the trust. Christ finds his servants already equipped in various degrees. With that he has nothing to do, but finding this difference, he gives them capital in proportion to their power. Thus each one has his encouragement. If a man has large powers, he has a great work; if he has moderate powers, he has a work that he can do; if his powers are small, his task is small, but he is one called to do all his effort. He is just. If the same task had been given to each of the three, the man of five talents would get the credit of being the one-talent man was still struggling hopelessly with his work. There is proportionate work and we thank God for that.

Evidently the talents are opportunities which are given us to improve. They are spheres in which we are placed to do our Lord's work. We can imagine a boy with no education, no money, small intellectual capacity working say as an errand boy and with little prospect of ever earning more than enough to provide food and clothing. When he becomes a Christian, what can he do? Shall he say to God at the last, "I was so poorly equipped and had so many difficulties that I could do nothing. Thou didst not give me the power and the opportunity that thou gavest others. Thou canst not expect to reap where thou hast not strawed"? Or shall he by his patience, his cheerfulness in poverty and hardship, his readiness to help, though it be only in sweeping a room, or distributing invitations to a meeting, or doing some menial service for some sick saint, show that his heart is right and he will serve Christ as far as ever his power can go? Such things the humblest can do and those who do them in the right spirit will hear at the last the same encomium that their five-talented brethren hear: "Well done, good and faithful servant." But here is another: an ordinary man, not brilliant, not rich, not influential, but moderately circumstanced. Something more is expected of him. If he has more leisure, he has more opportunity for Christian effort; if he has more money, he can give to needy causes or can help the struggling poor; if he has better education, he can give instruction and suggestion. He can do more than his one-talented brother and he must do more if he would win the approval of his Lord. But how about the men of five talents? These are the men of genius, of wealth, of eloquence. Their ability for service is so great that the five talents of boundless opportunity are committed to them. What shall they do with them? It is a great, and almost a fearful, responsibility. If, being Christians, they fail to turn their opportunities to the fullest account, how sad for them will be the day when "the Lord of those servants cometh and reckoneth with them"! It is not always the man of one talent who hides it in the earth. We see men of five talents doing it all around us—men who might do so much for Christ, who have abundant means and leisure, and brilliant gifts and the best education—yet who live for themselves, who never make an effort to help others, or to win souls, or even to testify that they belong to Christ. Dread words are those which describe them—unprofitable servants! To every Christian come the inspiring words of the poet:

Be strong to labor, and allow
Thy Master's will to appoint the where and how.
Serve God; and winter's cold or summer's heat,
The breezy mountain or the dusty street,
Scene, season, circumstance, alike shall be
His welcome messengers of joy to thee;
His kingdom is within thee!

REVIVAL SERVICES.

Rev. J. M. Shelly, of the United Brethren Church, at Steelton, Pa., writes us: "Prof. and Mrs. J. J. Lowe, of Philadelphia, assisted us for two weeks in our recent revival services with the greatest satisfaction. Their illustrated services were exceedingly interesting and exactly in harmony with all the other services. Many came to see the pictures and were brought under conviction and gave themselves to the Lord. We had many conversions during their stay with us."

MY DINNER.

WAS the dinner hour. I had taken my seat,
glanced at the food I intended to eat;
an over supply, and in quality plain,
t enough, and 'tis wholesome," I thought me again:
now scanty and poor seemed the food on my board pared with some tables with luxuries stored—
I almost had cherished an envious thought ards those, who it seemed, had a happier lot.
sat (in a vision, with eyes open wide),
tte maid entered and stood at my side.
clothing was faded, and ragged, and soiled, too thin for the day, tho' the weather was mild;
rawny and pale, there she silently stood;
with eyes, ah! so longing she looked at my food.
oyed at her presence. I bade her begone.
't you see that the food is enough for but one?"
still she remained, never speaking a word;
another was speaking; it was Conscience
I heard.
t see that poor suffering child at your
u might give her some; you can surely divide."
s, I can, it is true: I suppose that I must, ugh I want it myself, shall I give her that crust?"
before the act I proposed had been done child began speaking, in quavering tone:
m hungry," she said, and she shook as she stood,
ll three days have passed since I tasted of food.
one will give me: I've no money to buy;—
ase give me some food or I surely will die."

ree days without food!" I said it again, ile three times each day I had plenty, tho' plain.
I'm not hungry now;— I'll fast one meal at least,
t see the child eat;— It's as good as a n I noticed the hand that reached out for the food,

as pierced with a nail, and was covered

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Dr. Schaff's Reminiscences.*

"MY first childish ambition was to be a soldier. My next and stronger passion was to be a poet. I filled my memory early with the lyrics of Salis, my countryman whose venerable form and whose funeral in 1834 I well remember, and Schiller, Goethe, Uhland, Ruckert, Knapp, as also with selections from the ancient and other modern classics. I wrote many verses, German and Latin, in all sorts of metres, ancient and modern, and sometimes I imagined myself to be a poet. But the wish was father to the thought. No effort can supply the defect of nature. I now look upon my juvenile verses as attempts to fly without wings. Nevertheless poetry has ever been to me, next to religion, my richest source of spiritual enjoyment.

"As soon as I awoke to a sense of the paramount importance of religion, I chose the ministry for my vocation, and adhered ever after to this resolution without the quaver of a doubt. This was in my sixteenth year. My life's work has been as an educator of ministers in the class room and through the pen. I was strongly encouraged to give myself up to teaching by my beloved professors, Drs. Schmid of Tubingen, Tholuck and Muller of Halle, and Neander, Twesten and Hengstenberg of Berlin.

"The road leading to a professorship in the German and Swiss universities is steep and arduous. The preliminary examination and disputation are a severe test. Then follows the severer ordeal, the career of the privat-docent, the necessary forerunner of the fixed appointment of extraordinary professor. Except in unusual cases the privat-docent depends for his support upon the fees of the students whom he can attract, and upon work outside the class room. He often submits to great privation, and fails as last. Many a docent, like Erbkam and Ueberweg, has waited for more than a decade before being promoted to the place of extraordinary professor with its modest income."

Looking back over an interval of more than forty years, he wrote as follows: "Among my hearers (while a teacher in Germany) were several of my Swiss countrymen, and even an American professor, Dr. Park of Andover, then sojourning in Berlin. Being deficient in his knowledge of German, he asked me to give him private instruction on the theological system of Schleiermacher, but as my knowledge of English was very scant, I could not be of much use to him. I introduced him with no better result to my friend, Kahnis, who was so worried by his many Yankee questions that he exclaimed in despair, 'God forgive Christopher Columbus for having discovered America!'"

"My most intimate friend in Berlin was Godet. He was then acting as tutor to the ill-fated Emperor Frederick III and attending the lectures of Neander, of whom he was an enthusiastic admirer. I saw him almost daily with the young prince in the palace garden or in my own room. He was a charming Christian gentleman, and highly esteemed in the royal palace. He has kept up a constant correspondence with the prince, who spoke to me at the fifth centenary of Heidelberg University, where I met him, in the most affectionate terms of the old tutor."

The occasion of Dr. Schaff's coming to the United States was a call from the German Reformed Church. The feeling was quite general when he came that its interests would be advanced by having in its theological seminary a thoroughly equipped German scholar, who would not only give instruction to the rising generation of preachers through the medium of the German language, but also revive and strengthen the bond of union between it and the churches of the mother country, its original confessions as well as its ecclesiastical symbols and traditions were carried from the Palatinate and German Switzerland.

In the month of July, 1843, two clergymen, one the Rev. Dr. Theodore L. Hoffeditz, and the other the Rev. Benjamin S. Schneck called on Dr. Schaff in his study. They had been sent abroad by the German Reformed synod to place in the hands of Dr. Frederick W. Krummacher a call to a professorship in Mercersburg, Pa. Dr. Krummacher was then in the fullness of his powers as the most eloquent evangelical pulpit orator in the German, and was widely known in England and America through the translations of his sermons. After considerable hesitation he declined the invitation, and the attention of the delegates was turned to the young Berlin licentiate.

At the second interview, the delegates secured his permission to present his name to the synod on their return to America. The mission of these two worthy German-American clergymen was novel, and excited a good deal of attention in Berlin and Germany. The King of Prussia, Frederick William IV., who was much interested in religious matters, invited them to an interview and made them a donation of 1500 thalers for the seminary at Mercersburg.

Returning to America, Dr. Schneck found the synod in session at Winchester, Virginia, October, 1843. The enthusiastic testimonials of the distinguished theologians were set before it, and copies of Mr. Schaff's work on the Sin against the Holy Ghost distributed. By unanimous vote, a call was extended to him to the chair of "Church History and Biblical Literature in the Theological Seminary at Mercersburg, Pennsylvania."

The native race of Hawaii represents ag d trinity—height, standard weight, and pe t health. Their fine physique and splendid h h are due entirely to a perfect digestion.

Great Russian Enterprise.

When Russia will have completed her project for a great canal connecting the Baltic and Black Seas, she can boast of one of the most tremendous industrial and commercial creations in the world—the largest canal and her great Trans-Siberian railroad now nearly finished. A writer in an exchange tells us that this canal will be capable of accommodating ships of the heaviest tonnage, sailing the rate of six knots an hour.

SEEKING GOD IN HIS WORD.

The strategic value of such a canal is seen immediately in the fact that it will enable Russia to mobilize a great fleet in the Baltic or the Black Sea in at least 167 hours. Should Russian interests demand the speedy presence of a large addition to her Chinese squadron, and also the presence of great bodies of military reinforcements, the fleets could be sent through the Baltic canal, the Bosporus, the Marmora, the Dardanelles, across the Mediterranean, through the Suez, and across the Indian Ocean to the seat of the difficulty, while troops would go to the front by way of the Trans-Siberian Railroad.

The canal will connect the city of Riga, on the Baltic, with Cherson, on the Black Sea. It will be necessary to make 125 miles of excavations to connect the two rivers, and the canal, which will be 1,000 miles long, and have an average depth of 38 feet, will cost about $97,000,000, and will be ready for business in 1902.

TRUSTING.

JESUS, my Saviour, teach me thy will,
Hilt thou protect me and keep me still
In the blest pathway, where thou shalt guide;
Oh keep me ever close to thy side.

So I would trust thee in everything,
And will always thy praises sing.
Take me from straying, guide all the way,
Or the dawning of heaven's day.

Teach me thy lessons, which life must learn,
So heavenly wisdom my heart doth yearn.
Thou art my Saviour, gracious and kind,
All that is needed in thee I find.

MARTHA SHEPARD LIPPINCOTT.

A Railroad Bridge on Tree-Tops.

A strange story comes from California regarding a very novel use to which her giant redwoods are being put. The story goes as an exchange informs us, that a railroad in Sonoma county, between the Duncan Cyber mills and Stewart Point, encounters about midway in its course a deep ravine, from the bottom of which rise two giant redwood trees. When the railroad was in process of construction it was found necessary to cross this ravine, but it seemed too great an expense to build an ordinary railroad bridge. Real ingenuity came to the rescue. In the first place, the big redwoods were sawed off seventy-five feet from the ground, this being the exact height from the bottom of the ravine to the level of the tops of the trees. Next, trees on either side were sawed off of sufficient length to render their tops in a direct line with the tops of the redwoods, as well as of the edges of the banks. In this fashion was nature made to provide the piers and superstructure of the desired bridge.

Saved by Grace.

At a recent meeting in the Bowery Mission Chapel while several converts were giving their testimonies, a young man came forward and told a most interesting story of his spiritual experience. He was a stranger in New York, and was living a godless and intemperate life, when, happening one day to pass the Bowery Mission, he stepped inside. This was on Nov. 21, 1896. At that time he had been without food or a bed for several days.

"I found Christ in the Mission," he said, "and since then he has not only kept me, but provided for me also. I am leaving the city to-morrow to go home to my father and mother and children, and I trust that some wayward young man will give himself to Christ as I have done, and he will never regret it. I was a drunkard of the lowest type, and if God can cure me, he can cure all."

"Seeking God."

An instructive personal experience comes to us from Pasadena, Cal. "Forty-seven years ago," the writer says, "I was converted at a Methodist revival in Ohio, and then and there came a great change in my life. Some one had said to me while I was seeking God: 'Be sure you do not neglect your secret prayers. With your Bible or little Testament before you, shut yourself in and ask God for wisdom to understand his Word and how to live.' I have done so ever since. Each evening I find opportunity to carry the Gospel to some soul still in darkness."

WEAK LUNGS.

A book by Dr. Robert Hunter, of New York, gives all the latest discoveries of medical science regarding Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis and Pulmonary Catarrh, explains their differences, and points out the curative treatment of each form of lung disease.

Dr. Hunter is one of the oldest and most experienced lung specialists of the world, having devoted his professional life, since 1851, to the Special Study and Treatment of Lung Complaints. He was the first to discover Consumption to be a local disease of the lungs, and to show that it destroys life solely by strangling the breathing power of that organ.

He was the father of the local treatment of the lungs by antiseptic medical air inhalations—the inventor of the first inhaling instruments ever employed for the cure of lung diseases, and the discoverer of the only known germicide which has power to kill the germs of consumption in the lungs of the patient.

His antiseptic inhalation is the only scientific treatment of lung diseases. It applies the remedies to the very seat of the disease in the only direct and common-sense way. Its success is attested by thousands whom it has saved and restored to health from these dread maladies.

A copy of Dr. Hunter's book will be sent free to all subscribers of The Christian Herald who are interested by addressing him at 117 West 45th Street, New York.

India's Widows Sheltered

Pandita Ramabai Tells the Story of the Work to Which "The Christian Herald" Contributed.

IN a modest pamphlet issued by Pandita Ramabai, on the eve of her departure for America, she thus describes God's providential dealings with her in the time of India's misery:

In giving you a short account of abont ten months' work, I feel like saying, with the Psalmist, "Many, O Lord my God, are thy wonderful works which thou hast done, and thy thoughts which are to us-ward: they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee: If I would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered." God has indeed done so many wonderful things for me during the last ten months, that it is impossible to number them, and I cannot but most gratefully render my thanks and praises "unto him that it is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think."

In October last I heard of the terrible famine in the Central Provinces, and received my call from God to go there and rescue some of the young widows who were starving to death. It was not until the last week of December that I had the courage to obey the call. There were many obstacles. I was doubtful whether I could get any of the kind of girl widows whom I could admit to my school. The next chief difficulty was the want of place to shelter the girls and of money to maintain them, even if they were to be had. So I did not venture at first to step out of Poona, but my conscience began to trouble me for not having obeyed the call at once, and I was obliged to leave my comfortable nest and go out to the Central Provinces in search of the poor widow girls who were dying of starvation. The Lord put it in my mind to rescue three hundred girls; and in less than ten months from the time when I began the rescue work, the Lord has given me nearly three hundred girls from the famine districts. These are my own girls, and I am free to bring them up in the fear of God; praise the Lord! Still no one of them is compelled to become a Christian. I give them the same religious freedom as the old girls have always had. And yet most of these new girls delight to attend prayer, and to hear the Word of God read to them. About ninety of these new girls have accepted the Lord Jesus as their Saviour, and I believe that before the next Csmp Meeting takes place at Lanowlee, the number of my spiritual children will increase to 225. My dear friends, I am not talking of things imaginary; I find the promises of God literally fulfilled if I but expect; and it is with great joy that I render thanks to the Lord and praise his name for being so very good to me.

You know also from my last account how I had no money in my hand for the support of these new girls. I had no human resources to depend upon, but the Lord raised friends for me, and money was poured in to our treasury and the blessings of the Lord came down like a shower, and his promise as recorded in Ps. 81: 10, which he gave me, has been literally fulfilled. I shall give a full account of the moneys received and spent up to this time. A separate list of donations received has been printed and sent out to the donors. I must here record heartfelt gratitude and give thanks to the dear children of God who have so generously sent contributions from all parts of the world for the support of my Famine girls. I am glad to be able to say that most of the girls who had been nothing but skeletons, and who like the lepers of the jungle, are now looking humanized. Many of them show great eagerness and quickness to learn. Those who have professed faith in Christ are showing real signs of a change of heart by serving and helping other girls, by their self-forgetfulness and love toward one another. Many of them have learned to read in an incredibly short time, and will soon be placed in higher standards, and I do hope that they will be the shining lights in different parts of the country where they may praise God to end them in future.

I thank the Lord for all his goodness for providing for all our temporal and spiritual needs, for giving the good helpers and friends to work and pray for me. I must also again thank you, dear, good friends, who have helped me by your prayers and money, and by working for me in various ways. The Lord bless you and reward you as he only can, according to his riches. Believe me most gratefully yours in the Lord's service. RAMABAI.

The Lord's Coming.

A REMARKABLE expression of confidence in the near approach of our Lord's coming, was uttered by the late Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, in the last address he ever gave to the students in his Pastor's College. The address throughout, as we learn from his recently published biography, was very tender, as if his mind was already in the shadow of the valley and as if he had heard with his spiritual ear a premonition that he was giving the young men his adieu. His address closed with the following words:

"Once more, dear friends, our relation and position to our Lord is that of waiting for His coming. I do not know how far most of you are warmly affected toward the blessed truth of the second advent; but I trust that many of you believe it and are enlivened by faith in it. This great hope is gaining ground among lovers of evangelical doctrine. Seasons are not with us, but the Lord will come. He is on his way even now, for He says, 'I am coming quickly.'

Our Lord may come right soon; certain signs raise our hopes very high. The love of many waxes cold, and the devil is doubly busy; and this last is no doubtful sign. When you see a farmer beginning to burn the gates, and break down hedges, and unroof the barns, and so on, you say, 'That fellow's lease is run out.' Satan has great wrath when he knows that his time is short. In the case of the demoniac child, we read, 'As he was yet a-coming the devil threw him down and tare him.' He knew that he was about to be expelled, and so did his worst."

"The double veiling of the heavens only brings on that darkest part of the night which precedes the dawn of day. When the tale of bricks is doubled Moses appears, and the same is true of our still greater Deliverer. Let us take courage, and be of good heart; for while we lift Christ on high, and glorify His name, He is on the way to take up the quarrel of His covenant and rout His foes."

COMFORT ONE ANOTHER.

...y heavy is the weight of ill in every heart, and comforters are needed much, of Christ-like mold.

As ye go on the road of life
And often weary in the way,
With changing scenes, with many cares,
And pressing burdens every day,
Let us comfort one another.

The gentle word of sympathy
Spoken in sorrow's lonely hour,
From out a heart of tenderness,
Comes with a sweet and soothing power.
Comfort one another.

The warm clasp of a loving hand,
When words seem vain for hidden grief,
Will often cheer a lonely soul,
Help onward with a felt relief.
Comfort one another.

These hearts of ours, how they can ache,—
And then how dear the fond caress,
The comfort, peace, the hallowed thought,
Born of a dear one's tenderness.
Comfort one another.

A kindly presence, tender tone,
A soft hand wiping falling tear,
The soothing voice, the cheery word,
From one to whom our life is dear.
Comfort one another.

Salem, Mass. —PHEBE A. HOLDER.

A Drunkard's Conversion.

Among the varied spiritual experiences at the Bowery Mission none are more encouraging than those that relate to the conversion of drunkards. Many interesting and helpful testimonies are given by the converts at the evening gatherings in the Mission hall. A recent testimony by a former slave to drink tells this experience.

"I was in the habit of "breaking out" drinking about every month or six weeks, and the periods would last with me a week, sometimes two. I could not leave it off, though I tried hard. One morning in January, 1897, I made up my mind that I would go to Bellevue Hospital, and there the doctor sent me to the Alcoholic Ward, where I saw things which made me shudder. I did not think drink could do so much harm to man-kind. I brought a message down to the Bowery Mission from a man in the hospital for Mr. B. Wyburn, the superintendent. He heard my history and asked me to come to the meeting that evening. I went, accepted Christ, and made up my mind, with the help of God, that I would not touch another drop of liquor. Up to this time I have kept my resolution. I have been helped ever since I made the change. I have never since had the temptation to go into a saloon. God led me to the hospital and has been leading me ever since."

An Active Rescue Mission.

It is now five years since the establishment of the Liberty Street Union Rescue Mission of Pittsburg, Pa. At the anniversary meeting, recently held, Mr. J. W. McFarland, President of the Board of Trustees, reviewed the work of the Mission. Last year 33,656 meals and lodgings had been furnished to homeless men. An average of 100 to 150 had attended the nightly services. During the year over 300 had asked for prayer and a large number had given evidence of a desire to abandon sin, and, with God's help, to lead better lives. W. W. Phillips is the Mission Superintendent.

A feature of the work is a Gospel wagon, which makes its rounds with its organ and choir holding six or seven meetings every Sunday afternoon on the streets during the summer, besides others on week day evenings. Five hundred and seven street meetings have been held from the Gospel wagon, which have been attended by about 50,000 persons. During the year 422 meetings have been held in the church and 169 in the streets. A Sunday morning breakfast is given to all comers, a Gospel meeting following. During the time the Mission has been in existence the Gospel has been preached to about 250,000 attentive hearers; been supplied with food, lodging, and in many cases clothing, and 1,709 Gospel meetings have been held. The Mission is located at the corner of Liberty and Fourth streets, Pittsburg.

A Ministers' Union.

A Ministers' Union has been organized in San Francisco in which all the Protestant sects are united except the Episcopalians. Its objects are not authority, legislation, or business, but information, inspiration, and fellowship. The Rev. W. C. Harris, D.D., Methodist, is President, and the Rev. E. Lyman Hood, Congregational, is Secretary. The meetings are usually held in the auditorium of the Young Men's Christian Association with an average attendance of about four hundred.

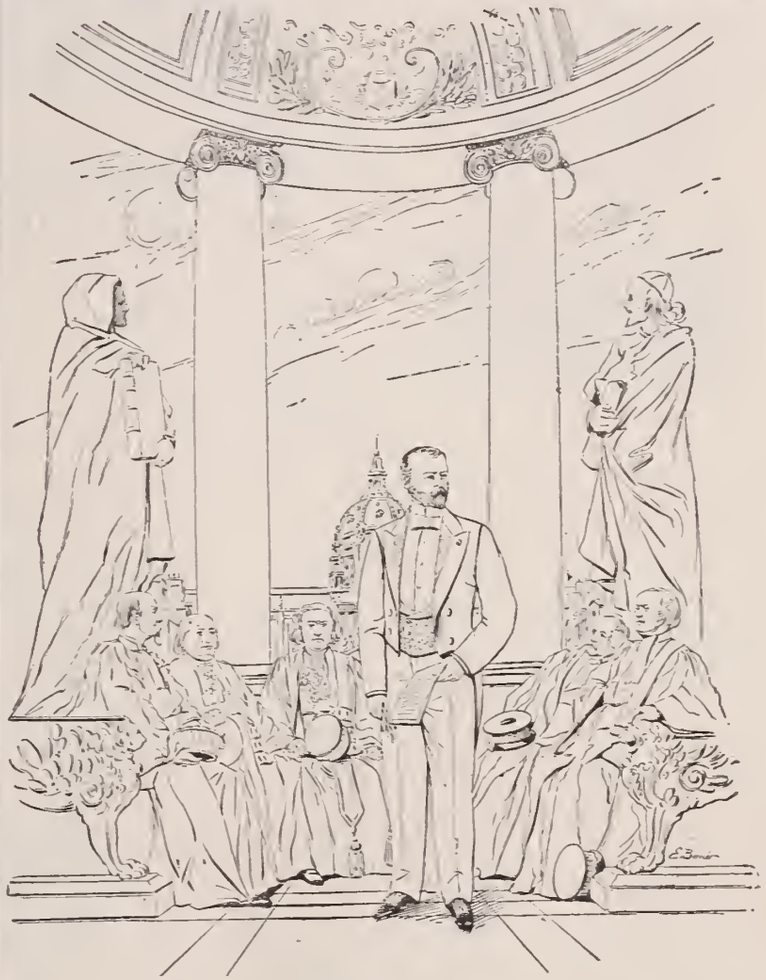
"MY DOCTOR"

AN EMINENT SCIENTIST'S WORK.



The above illustration is from a painting by Eugene Bauer, the famous French artist, of Dr. Slocum, Expounding His Wonderful "New Discovery."

Consumption, Cough, Catarrh the Fashionable Diseases.

Discovery that Makes These Diseases No Longer Feared.

MEDICINE AND ADVICE FREE.

His Laboratory a Mine of Health—Its Benefits Open to the World.

SEND IN YOUR APPLICATION.

There are a great many people in this world who are coughing, hawking and spitting themselves into their graves.

Are you one of them?

It is by some considered FASHIONABLE to be sick: but when the sickness has run its course and the end of life is near—IS IT FASHIONABLE THEN?

"Hope springs eternal in the human breast."

But hope may be too strong.

You may hope that your cough is nothing very serious, that your catarrh will go when the warm weather comes, that consumption will spare you when it strikes others.

What is a good name for such "hopefulness"? Carelessness? Thoughtlessness? Foolhardiness?

It is better to KNOW than to HOPE.

You can only know that you are SAFE when you are perfectly WELL and free from sickness.

You can easily learn the way to be well, if you wish it. It is the system of an eminent scientist whose advice you can obtain free, and who is giving to those who need it free medicine to alleviate their sufferings.

Learn to be well that life may be worth living, for disease is one of Nature's punishments to those who persist in remaining ignorant of her ways and rules.

Your blood draws its life from the oxygen it gets in your lungs. When sick lungs cut off the supply, your body wastes away for lack of nourishment.

This is consumption.

The germ that fastens on weak lungs and eats them up is the consumption germ.

The lung is made easy for its attack by colds, coughs catarrhs, and similar troubles.

Slocum's System, which drives all these diseases out of the body, builds the lungs, kills the germs, creates new, natural, visible LIFE in your worn-out body—regenerates you completely, and gives your system a NEW LEASE of life in a COMFORTABLE BODY—this system, which all doctors, chemists and scientists are talking about, is one of the most valuable discoveries of the times.

It is a result of the investigation of Koch, Pasteur, Virchow, Metchnikoff—a reduction of all the various theoretical suggestions of these eminent men, by an equally eminent man, to PRACTICE.

The Slocum System is fully explained and exemplified in a new pamphlet just off the press, which should be read by every thinking person.

Sent to you on application, with Three Free Bottles of the Doctor's New Discoveries which have revolutionized the theory and practice of medicine.

To obtain these valuable preparations, mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, your name and full address to The Dr. Slocum Laboratory, Slocum Building, New York City, when they will be sent you, on he simple condition that you employ them for the relief of suffering and do not write out of idle curiosity.

A Veteran Dead.

AMONG the eminent scholars to whom was committed the task of revising the New Testament, there was none who brought to the work greater learning or more judicial skill than the able professor whose death is just reported. Dr. Samuel Newth belonged to the Congregational denomination, but his learning and remarkable abilities won for him the respect of the leaders of the English Established Church, who are not apt to recognize excellence outside their own communion. At the age of thirty-four Dr. Newth was the pastor of an inconspicuous church in the English manufacturing district. He had attained high honors at Coward College and had passed with distinction an examination in London University, but was content to do pastoral work among the miners and potters of the English town where his learning could have been little appreciated. But in 1845 he was appointed classical and mathematical tutor at Western College, Plymouth. That was congenial work, and it was soon proved that he had special adaptation for it. There and at New College, London, to which he removed ten years later, he did valuable work in training young ministers. For forty-four years he devoted himself to this occupation and his success was conspicuous. In 1889 he resigned, to give the remainder of his years to study and literary work. Several valuable treatises on science, philosophy, and exegesis were produced by him. He was seventy-six years old this year which has seen the close of his labors.

REV. SAMUEL NEWTH, D.D.

The World's Peace Jubilee.

The Church of the First Century urges upon public attention the celebration of a World's Peace Jubilee during the last week of the present century, to prepare the way for the approaching "Golden Age and Millennial Dawn." Finding it self in accord with many churches in desire for peace between contending sects, it solicits by circular the co-operation of all denominations and of all religious and secular newspapers. The preparatory plan advocated is a "Weekly Free Conference" in all religious organizations, "to talk over the great work of the early Christians." "The Declaration of Principles" laid down as those upon which it is believed all sects can agree, affirms belief in a "Beneficent and Wise Intelligence, sustaining towards humanity the relation of Parent whose revelation is Nature, whose interpreter is Science, whose most acceptable worship is doing good;" also in individual right to interpret truth and individual responsibility of action, since "no one can determine for another what is truth and duty;" "that direction, according to its quality, results in suffering or in joy by the operation of inherent laws, physical and spiritual," in a future state; in a universal brotherhood and also that "a nobler civilization can be better attained by associative and co-operative than by merely individual action." Union of efforts for the practical application of these convictions is invited. The circular ends by saying: "Those who send this circular prefer not to make it personal by giving many honorable names to indorse it, but are content to let its truths be its own authority. Those desiring further information can address "Secretary Central Body, 923 F street, Washington, D. C."

The New Secretary.

Dr. Charles L. Thompson, whose portrait appeared in this journal on Feb. 9, has announced his acceptance of the position of Secretary of the Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church, to which he was recently elected. The members of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, of which he is pastor, made an earnest effort to keep him; but he felt that the position, difficult as it is, and the greater demands upon him. He states that he expects to devote his energies first to the lifting of the debt and then to the organization of the work of the Board on the best methods, whether on the general or synodical plan.—Independent.

"I AM WITH THE WOUNDED."—Clara Barton's Cable Message from Havana to "The Christian Herald."

am with the wounded," flashed along the wire
From the isle of Cuba, swept with sword and fire.
Angel sweet of mercy, may your cross of red
Cheer the wounded living; bless the wounded dead.

"I am with the starving," let the message run
From the stricken island, when this task is done;
Food and money plenty wait at your command.
Give in generous measure; fill each outstretched hand.

"I am with the happy," this we long to hear
From the isle of Cuba, trembling now in fear.
May the great disaster touch the hearts of men,
And, in God's great mercy, bring back peace again.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

D. W., Binghamton, N. Y.; Lillian M. Vines and others. Had Dr. Talmage scriptural ground for speaking of Martha as a widow? If she was a widow, is anything known of her husband?

It was an inference from Luke's remark (10: 38) that the house at Bethany belonged to Martha. If the house had belonged to her father it would have descended, according to Oriental custom to her brother Lazarus. The inference from its being described as hers is that she inherited it from a deceased husband, but nothing is known of him.

S. A. M., Eau Claire, Wis. 1. Is it wrong for a Christian to be angry and defend his rights when imposed upon by others? 2. What is meant by the expression in the Apostle's creed, "the communion of saints?"

1. There are some rights which ought to be defended, the rights of conscience for example. There is no reason why a Christian should tamely submit to being swindled or slandered. But there is no reason for being angry about it. Anger is an unchristian feeling which should be avoided. It is sinful, and moreover does not tend to a restoration of a right which has been infringed. 2. Practically it is fellowship, the comradeship or brotherhood in Christ, entailing on all who bear his name the duty of comforting their brethren in trouble, ministering to their need and associating with them for mutual encouragement and edification.

B. A. B., Mendota, Ill. Can you tell me anything about the Albright Church?

Its proper name is the Evangelical Association. The name of Albright refers to its founder, Jacob Albright, who, in the year 1790, preached to the German churches of Eastern Pennsylvania. There was at that time a stagnation in those churches and a general low tone of doctrine and morals. Albright's preaching led to an extensive revival, and the converts united together in fellowship. In the year 1816 a general conference of the converts was held, and a church regularly organized. Its progress since that time has been remarkable, and the church has steadily increased in number and in influence. Its services are not now exclusively in German, as they were at first, but are in English, or partly in English and partly in German. They extend over the Northern, Western and Pacific States. Their doctrines and method of church government resemble the Methodist Episcopal Church more than any other. The number of members is numbered at 142,1, the number of communicants at 151,7[illegible]

Constant Reader, Salisbury, N. C. When a sinner feels remorse for past sins, must he continue in that state hopeless and that he may, if those who, as Christ said, "shall seek to enter in not shall not be able."

No, he should not entertain the idea for a moment. Christ's words were not intended to discourage any seeking soul. Let him forsake his sins and ask God for Christ's sake to forgive him, and if he accepts and places all his trust in Christ he will be forgiven. God does not desire the death of a sinner, but rather that he turn from his evil way.

Della E. Francis, Saginaw, Mich., writes:

IN JERUSALEM OF TO-DAY

BY HON. SELAH MERRILL D.D. LL.D

IN THE MARKET-PLACES.

Crowds of Noisy Dealers in the Thoroughfares — Some of the Peculiar Callings—Scenes that have Undergone no Change in Many Centuries.

HE traffic that goes on in the streets of Jerusalem is not the least interesting phase of its manifold life. ist of articles that are bought and sold is a long one and embraces all the kinds of fruit and vegetables that are raised in the country: also milk, butter, eggs, poultry and pretty doves; mats, baskets, and cooking utensils; ru , cloth, and trinkets which are sought by the peasants; drinks, bread, cakes, n , and pickles; Bedouin clubs, pottery, a second hand furniture. I am sure I cc d mention a hundred objects, many of which my readers would wonder why th should ever be found in a market or w t possible use could ever be made of thn. All this is the business of the stet itself without any reference to the s s. At different points thughout the ci men and wmen, buyers a sellers, hudd together w their wares a the blocka is perfect. T few policemn are indescribably rough a when some ofials or solrs wish to ps along they ph these people aside ruthlely and kick their goods out as if they we only so nny chips. The c contains no pper market ce, but the forite market st for this traft is between t American consulate and the Tower David, where there is an open space ty feet wide by one hundred feet g. Moreover this is very near the a gate, by which a large proportion of country produce is brought into the . It is also the main route from this e to the Jew's quarter, so that it has vantages over any other location.

Such a market is wholly unlike what y be seen in some of the open squares Market day in a German city. There remembers the attractive extemporbooths or shops, the tiny roads beeen them, and the busy talkative salesmen who are more than ready to serve ir customers. In Jerusalem there are booths, and every dealer sits on the vement. The market women are in no ste to sell; they may call out to somee passing along, "Will you buy?" or, lady, take," "O gentlemen, take"; t they seldom become importunate till ey find that the day is passing and ey have not disposed of their goods. nerally the middle of the afternoon ds the business all done and the peo- scattered.

Judging by the crowds, the noise, and e amount of goods exposed for sale, one ould infer that a large amount of busiss was being done, but it is an interestg fact that single transactions are alays for very small amounts. Probably very few of the trades amount to twenty-five cents each, and it is more probable still that nine-tenths of them are for amounts under ten cents each. If the quantity of goods sold amounts to a piastre, that is four cents "good money" or five cents "poor money," the trade is considered a good one. It is thus seen that everything done is on a small scale. An earthen water-bottle costs a cent: a loaf of bread the same: a basket of wood ten or twelve cents: a good head of cauliflower four or five cents: a cucumber ten inches long half a cent: and two oranges one cent. These are sample prices showing that there may be a trade attended with considerable dickering and noise when really only a very small amount of money is involved.

SELLING CACTUS FRUIT.

Close to the dealer in cactus fruit is the dealer in mulberries. On large flat dishes he has piles of these berries. In color, size, external appearance, and taste they resemble our finest blackberries, and a stranger might readily be persuaded that he was eating this well-known fruit. From the juice a highly colored and delightfully cooling drink is made, of which the natives are very fond. This fruit grows upon large, tall trees which in the New Testament were known as the "Sycamine." When mulberry trees are raised for the purpose of feeding silkworms they are kept trimmed back close so that the branches remain near the ground.

Near us a peasant has just sat down by the wall to eat his dinner. He has two dishes only, or rather two articles of food, and of these the piece of bread we recognize at once, but the other puzzles us. It is some vegetable two and one-half inches in diameter and ten inches long with a very red skin. It resembles in shape but not in color a large carrot, and we discover that it is a radish. Certainly not like the dainty pink and white little bulbs which we enjoy, but a variety far better suited to the needs of these people. If we watch him we shall find that the process of consumption is not a very long one, for in less than five minutes both the bread and the enormous radish have disappeared.

Here is a dealer who has appropriated to himself an unusual amount of space near the wall and he appears also to have more than his share of customers. As they are mostly boys, large and small, his attraction must be of a special kind. Some camels have just arrived from Jaffa loaded with sugar-cane and for this he finds a ready market. A boy will invest a quarter of a cent in a section of sweet cane and as long as it lasts he considers himself happy. Until within very recent years this was the only candy known in Jerusalem, and "this is what the children cry for" to-day. In this form, candy is harmless, and no child can be injured by eating it. Camel-loads of this candy go from the sea coast where this cane is raised to all the large towns in the interior to make glad not only the children but adults as well, for grown people eat it with a child's relish.

Here is a great pile of watermelons and there is another: in fact these are found at intervals all over the city. They are raised in great numbers on the Plain of Sharon and hundreds of camel-loads are brought to Jerusalem. We think that melons cannot be raised without some moisture derived from showers or from artificial means: but in Palestine the melons are as fine as those of which we boast in America, and they grow without a drop of water. The earth is dry, there is neither dew nor showers, and no irrigation, and still they grow to perfection. The price obtained for them is, one would think, hardly sufficient to pay for bringing them to market. Americans eat only the red portions, but the natives of Palestine eat that and also the white parts so close that only a very thin rind is left to throw away. To the people of that country the melon season is one of the joyful seasons of the year.

Here is a pottery dealer. His specialty is jars for water or wine. They are made in Gaza, and although so fragile, they are brought hither on camels. Some of them are of great size, holding twenty or forty gallons. This trade flourishes best about the time when grapes are gathered and these large jars are needed for storing wine. Another pottery dealer near by has utensils, of the same material of course, for cooking, and about him are a number of peasant women dickering as to the price which, though trifling to us, seems large to them.

Here is a woman selling tender grape leaves used for wrapping up a small portion of cooked rice into dainty mouthfuls: and here are half a dozen women with baskets of wood, sticks which they have picked up on some mountain side five or ten miles distant and brought to market on their heads, a most painful way of earning a few cents: and here is a solid row of cauliflower three feet in height and ten yards long, which is tempting and very cheap and in a few hours every head of it will have disappeared. This excellent vegetable grows to perfection on the great debris heaps south of the walls of Jerusalem where in ages past the bodies of tens of thousands of slaughtered men have been thrown out to lie unburied.

A STREET AUCTION.

The dealer in cheap, fancy-colored pocket handkerchiefs and wooden combs, the dealer in fresh mint and all kinds of spices, the dealer in seeds, the sellers of cheap, unsweetened cakes of bread, a very numerous class of trades people and scattered all over the city: the dealer in eggs who ordinarily carries on a large trade but who when eggs reach the exorbitant price of a cent a piece has to go out of the business because he finds no customers: the dealer in chickens, and the dealer in young doves, for the poultry traffic is divided into a number of distinct sections: these and a score of others, all very interesting to American eyes must pass by unnoticed.

Time and again our attention has been arrested by the orange dealers and their beautiful fruit. Twenty-five square miles of territory at Jaffa are covered with orange groves, and twice a month steamers come from London and Liverpool to carry this fruit to England. I regard the Jaffa oranges among the finest in the world. This industry might be increased indefinitely. The great piles of oranges in the streets of Jerusalem are a delight to the eye. The medium-sized fruit measures nine and a half by thirteen and a half inches, while the larger ones measure eleven by sixteen inches, and many specimens are larger even than that. Two of these magnificent oranges can be bought for a cent.

I think I never knew what choice grapes were till I visited Palestine. Nicer fruit of this kind does not grow in any other part of the world. I do not wonder that the vintage season is a glad one for the poor, oppressed peasantry of the Holy Land.

In our glance at the street traffic of Jerusalem we must have learned that Palestine, poor in so many respects, is rich in vegetables. In regard to the cultivation of vegetables and fruits, such as those I have mentioned and some others, it could be increased a hundred fold were there a government that knew how to foster native industries and thus encourage its people in developing the resources of the soil.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: I. Cor. 13: 12, ...

For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face.

THE BIBLE is the most forceful and pungent of books. While it has the sweetness of a mother's hush for human trouble, it has all the keenness of a scimeter, and the crushing power of a lightning-bolt. It portrays with more than a painter's power, at one stroke picturing a heavenly throne and a judgment conflagration. The strings of this great harp are fingered by all the splendors of the future, now sounding with the crackle of consuming worlds, now thrilling with the joy of the everlasting emancipated. It tells how one forbidden tree in the garden blasted the earth with sickness and death; and how another tree, though leafless and bare, yet, planted on Calvary, shall yield a fruit which shall more than antidote the poison of the other. It tells how the red-ripe clusters of God's wrath were brought to the wine-press, and Jesus trod them out; and how, at last, all the golden chalices of heaven shall glow with the wine of that awful vintage. It dazzles the eye with an Ezekiel's vision of wheel, and wing, and fire, and whirlwind; and stoops down so low that it can put its lips to the ear of a dying child, and say, "come up higher."

And yet Paul, in my text, takes the responsibility of saying that it is only an indistinct mirror, and that its mission shall be suspended. I think there may be one Bible in heaven, fastened to the throne. Just as now, in a museum, we have a lamp exhumed from Herculaneum or Nineveh, and we look at it with great interest and say, "How poor a light it must have given compared with our modern lamps!" So I think that this Bible, which was a lamp to our feet in this world, may lie near the throne of God, exciting our interest to all eternity by the contrast between its comparatively feeble light and the illumination of heaven. The Bible, now, is the scaffolding to the rising temple, but when the building is done, there will be no use for the scaffolding.

The idea I shall develop to-day is, that in this world our knowledge is comparatively dim and unsatisfactory, but nevertheless is introductory to grander and more complete vision. This is eminently true in regard to our view of God. We hear so much about God that we conclude that we understand him. He is represented as having the tenderness of a father, the firmness of a judge, the majesty of a king, and the love of a mother. We hear about him, talk about him, write about him. We lisp his name in infancy, and it trembles on the tongue of the dying octogenarian. We think that we know very much about him. Take the attribute of mercy. Do we understand it? The Bible blossoms all over with that word—mercy. It speaks again and again of the tender mercies of God; of the sure mercies; of the great mercies; of the mercy that endureth forever; of the multitude of his mercies. And yet I know that the views we have of this great Being are most indefinite, one-sided and incomplete. When, at death, the gates shall fly open, and we shall look directly upon him, how new and surprising! We see upon canvas a picture of the morning. We study the cloud in the sky, the dew upon the grass, and the husbandman on the way to the field. Beautiful picture of the morning! But we rise at day-break and go up on a hill to see for ourselves that which was represented to us. While we look the mountains are transfigured. The burnished gates of heaven swing open and shut, to let past a host of their splendors. The clouds are all aflame and hang pendent from arbors of jasper and amethyst. The waters make pathway of liquid pearl for the light to walk upon, and there is morning on the sea. The cries wipe over their scarred visage; and there is merriment among the mountains. Now you go home, and how tame your picture of the morning seems in contrast! Greater than that shall be the contrast between this Scriptural view of God and that which we shall have when standing face to face. This is a picture of the morning, that will be the morning itself.

Again: my text is true of the Saviour's excellency. By image, and sweet rhythm of expression, and startling antithesis, Christ is set forth—his love, his compassion, his work, his life, his death, his resurrection. We are challenged to measure it, to compute it, to weigh it. In the hour of our broken enthrallment, we mount up into high experience of his love, and shout until the countenance glows, and the blood bounds, and the whole nature is exhilarated, "I have found him!" And yet it is through a glass, darkly. We see not half of that compassionate face. We feel not half the warmth of that loving heart. We wait for death to let us rush into his outspread arms. Then we shall be face to face. Not shadow then, but substance. Not hope then, but the fulfilling of all prefigurement. That will be a magnificent unfolding. The rushing out in view of all hidden excellency, the coming again of a long-absent Jesus, to meet us—not in rags, and in penury, and death, but amidst a light, and pomp, and outbursting joy such as none but a glorified intelligence could experience. Oh! to gaze full upon the brow that was lacerated, upon the side that was pierced, upon the feet that were nailed; to stand close up in the presence of him who prayed for us on the mountain, and thought of us by the sea, and agonized for us in the garden, and died for us in horrible crucifixion; to feel of him, to embrace him, to take his hand, to kiss his feet, to run our fingers along the scars of ancient suffering; to say, "This is my Jesus! He gave himself for me. I shall never leave his presence. I shall forever behold his glory. I shall eternally hear his voice. Lord Jesus, now I see thee! I behold where the blood started, where the tears coursed, where the face was distorted. I have waited for this hour. I shall never turn my back on thee. No more looking through imperfect glasses. No more studying thee in the darkness. But, as long as this throne stands, and this everlasting river flows, and those garlands bloom, and these arches of victory remain to greet home heaven's conquerors, so long I shall see thee Jesus of my choice; Jesus of my song; Jesus of my triumph—forever and forever—face to face!"

The idea of the text is just as true when applied to God's providence. Who has not come to some pass in life thoroughly inexplicable? You say, "What does this mean? What is God going to do with me now? He tells me that all things work together for good. This does not look like it." You continue to study the dispensation, and after awhile guess about what God means. "He means to teach me this. I think he means to teach me that. Perhaps it is to humble my pride. Perhaps it is to make me feel more dependent. Perhaps to teach me the uncertainty of life." But after all, it is only a guess—a looking through the glass, darkly. The Bible assures us there shall be a satisfactory unfolding. "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." You will know why God took to himself that only child. Next door there was a household of seven children. Why not take one from that group, instead of your only one? Why single out the dwelling in which there was only one heart beating responsive to yours? Why did God give you a child at all, if he meant to take it away? Why till the cup of your gladness brimming, if he meant to dash it down? Why allow all the tendrils of your heart to wind around that object, and then, when every fibre of your own life seemed to be interlocked with the child's life, with strong hand to tear you apart, until you fall, bleeding and crushed, your dwelling desolate, your hopes blasted, your heart broken? Do you suppose that God will explain that? Yea. He will make it plainer than any mathematical problem—as plain as that two and two make four. In the light of the throne you will see that it was right—all right. "Just and true are all thy ways, thou King of saints!"

Here is a man who cannot get on in the world. He always seems to buy at the wrong time and to sell at the worst disadvantage. He tries this enterprise, and fails; that business, and is disappointed. The man next door to him has a lucrative trade, but he lacks customers. A new prospect opens. His income is increased. But that year his family are sick; and the profits are expended in trying to cure the ailments. He gets a discouraged look. Becomes faithless as to success. Begins to expect disasters. Others wait for something to turn up; he waits for it to turn down. Others, with only half as much education and character, get on twice as well. He sometimes guesses as to what it all means. He says, "Perhaps riches would spoil me. Perhaps poverty is necessary to keep me humble. Perhaps I might, if things were otherwise, be tempted into dissipations." But there is no complete solution of the mystery. He sees through a glass darkly, and must wait for a higher unfolding. Will there be an explanation? Yes; God will take that man in the light of the throne, and say, "Child immortal, hear the explanation! You remember the failing of that great enterprise—your misfortune in 1857; your disaster in 1867. This is the explanation." And you answer, "It is all right."

I see, every day, profound mysteries of providence. There is no question we ask oftener than Why? There are hundreds of graves in Oak Hill and Greenwood and Laurel Hill that need to be explained. Hospitals for the blind and lame, asylums for the idiotic and insane, alms-houses for the destitute, and a world of pain and misfortune that demand more than human solution. Ah! God will clear it all up. In the light that pours from the throne, no dark mystery can live. Things now utterly inscrutable will be illumined as plainly as though the answer were written on the jasper wall, or sounded in the temple anthem. Bartimeus will thank God that he was blind; and Lazarus that he was covered with sores; and Joseph that he was cast into the pit; and Daniel that he denned with lions; and Paul that he was humpbacked; and David that he was driven from Jerusalem; and that sewing-woman that she could get only a few pence for making a garment; and that invalid that for twenty years he could not lift his head from the pillow; and that widow that she had such hard work to earn bread for her children. You know that in a song different voices carry different parts. The sweet and overwhelming part of the hallelujah of heaven will not be carried by those who rode in high places, and gave sumptuous entertainments; but pauper children will sing it, beggars will sing it, redeemed hod-carriers will sing it, those who were once the off-scourging of earth will sing it. The hallelujah will be all the grander for earth's weeping eyes, and aching heads, and exhausted hands, and scourged backs, and martyred agonies.

Again: the thought of the text is just when applied to the enjoyments of the righteous in heaven. I think we have but little idea of the number of the righteous in heaven. Infidels say, "Your heaven will be a very small place compared with the world of the lost; for, according to your teaching, the majority of men will be destroyed." I deny the charge. I suppose that the multitude of the finally lost, as compared with the multitude of the finally saved, will be a handful. I suppose that the few sick people in the hospital to-day, as compared with the hundreds of thousands of well people in the city, would not be smaller than the number of those who shall be cast out in suffering, compared with those who shall have upon them the health of heaven. For we are to remember that we are living in comparatively the beginning of the Christian dispensation, and that this world is to be populated and redeemed, and that ages of light and love are to flow on. If this be so, the saved will be in vast majority.

Take all the congregations that have to-day assembled for worship. Put them together and they would make but a small audience compared with the thousands and tens of thousands, and ten thousand times ten thousand, and the hundred and forty and four thousand that shall stand around the throne. Those flashed up to heaven in martyr-fires; those tossed for many years upon the invalid-couch; those fought in the armies of liberty, and rose as they fell; those tumbled from high scaffoldings, or slipped from the mast, were washed off into the sea. They came up from Corinth, from Laodicea, from the Red Sea bank and Gennesaret's wave, from Egyptian brick-yards, and Gideon's threshing-floor. Those, thousands of years ago, slept the last sleep; and these are this moment having their eyes closed, and their limbs stretched out for the sepulchre.

A general expecting an attack from the enemy stands on a hill and looks through a field-glass, and sees, in the great distance, multitudes approaching, but has no idea of their numbers. He says: "I can not tell anything about them. I merely know that there are a great number." And so John, without attempting to count, says: "A great multitude that no man can number."

We are told that heaven is a place of happiness; but what do we know about happiness? Happiness in this world is only a half-fledged thing; a flowery path with a serpent hissing across it; a broken pitcher, from which the water has dropped before we could drink it; a thrill of hilaration, followed by disastrous reactions. To help us understand the joy of heaven, the Bible takes us to a river. We stand on the grassy bank. We see the waters flow on with ceaseless wave. All the filth of the cities are emptied into it, and the banks are torn; and unhealthful exhalations spring up from it; and we fail to get an idea of the River of Life in heaven.

We get very imperfect ideas of the reunions of heaven. We think of some festal day on earth, when father and mother were yet living, and the child that came home. A good time that! But it had this drawback—all were there. That brother went off to sea, and never was heard from. That sister—did we not bear her away in the freshness of her youthful life, never more in this world to look upon her? Ah! there was a skeleton at the feast; and tears mingled with our laughter on that Christmas day. Not so with heaven's reunions. It will be an uninterrupted gladness. Many a Christian parent will look around and find all his children there. "Ah!" he says, "can it be possible that we are all here—life's pilgrimage over? The Jordan passed, and not one wanting? Why, even the prodigal is here. I almost gave him up. How long he despised my counsels! but grace hath triumphed. All here! all here! Tell the mighty joy through the city. Let the bells ring, and the angels mention it in their song. Wave it from the top of the walls. All here!"

No more breaking of heart-strings. Face to face. The orphans that were left poor, and in a merciless world, kicked and cuffed of many hardships, shall join their parents, over whose graves they so long wept, and gaze into their glorified countenances forever, face to face. We may come up from different parts of the world, one from the land and another from the depths of the sea; from lands affluent and prosperous, or from scenes of ragged distress; but we shall all meet in rapture and jubilee, face to face.

Many of our friends have entered upon that joy. A few days ago they sat with us studying these Gospel themes; but they saw through a glass, darkly—when revelation hath come. Your time will also come. God will not leave you floundering in the darkness. You stand wonder-struck and amazed. You feel as if the loveliness of life were dashed. You stand gazing into the open chasm of the grave. Wait a little. In the presence of your departed, and of him who carried them in his bosom, you shall soon stand face to face. Oh, that our last hour may kindle up with this promised joy! May we be able to say, like the Christian long ago, departing: "Though a pilgrim, walking through the valley, the mountain tops are gleaming from peak to peak!" or, like my dear friend and brother Alfred Cookman, who took his flight to the throne of God, saying in his last moment that which has already gone to Christian classics: "I am sweeping through the pearly gate, washed in the blood of the Lamb!"

FORTY YEARS OF SOUL-WINNING.

A notable Anniversary Celebrated at Bethany Church, Philadelphia—Mr. Wanamaker's First Bible-Class—Progress Under the Present Pastor.

FORTY years have passed away since that 7th of January, 1858, when a young man of earnest face and sympathetic heart addressed a little Sunday gathering of still younger men in a small second-story room on South street, Philadelphia. They sat on boards and kegs, brought out of the cellar by the landlord. It was not long before the room, the halls, and stairway were crowded with boys. During the summer of that year the services were held in a tent. Three hundred children, with many of their parents, assembled the first afternoon, and the evening service was crowded with a motley audience. This work so modestly begun by John Wanamaker during the summer months was crowned with remarkable success.

A small chapel soon took the place of the tent. On the 27th of January, 1859, the Bethany Chapel was dedicated with appropriate services, 274 scholars and 17 teachers being in attendance at the Sunday-school, although less than a year had elapsed since its commencement with 27 scholars and 2 teachers. This building soon became so crowded that additional accommodations were demanded. The present building, with a seating capacity of 4,820, was dedicated on the 13th of February, 1868. The size of the school at present will be shown by the figures, taken from the secretary's report of attendance on Feb. 13, when there were 4,977 present.

The fortieth anniversary of the Sabbath-school of the Bethany Presbyterian Church, now everywhere known as "the Wanamaker Church," was celebrated on Feb. 15, 16, 17, and 18, 1898. Hon. John Wanamaker, the first and only superintendent, has grown deeper into the hearts of the people every day of the wonderful work which he founded in the little South street room. His remarkable life career is now part of the history of the country.

A splendid, aggressive religious work is being accomplished in the church under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D. Dr. Chapman was born in Richmond, Ind., June 17, 1859. His classical studies were pursued at Oberlin and Lake Forest. He was graduated from Lane Theological Seminary in 1882. In 1883 he became pastor of the Dutch Reformed Church of Schuylerville, N. Y., and served with great success until 1885, when he took charge of the First Reformed Dutch Church of Albany, where his labors were wonderfully blessed in transforming an old conservative church to one of the greatest activity and noble evangelistic spirit. In 1890 he succeeded Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., as pastor of Bethany Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia. During his first pastorate in this church, from 1890 to 1892, there was commenced perhaps what is the most remarkable experience of any American church along evangelistic lines. In less than three years there were added to the church membership eleven hundred souls on confession of their faith, more than half of them being men.

In 1892 Dr. Chapman resigned as pastor of Bethany Church, the pressure from all sides being so urgent that he should engage exclusively in evangelistic work. In 1896 he returned to the church as pastor, with the privilege of at least six months of evangelistic work yearly, the church in his absence to be supplied by one of his co-pastors, under his direction.

The growth and activity of the church in the last two years has been phenomenal. For instance, at the communion service in November last, 204 persons were received on confession of faith, 175 of them being over thirty years of age, and mostly men. At the communion in January, 140 were received on confession of faith, many of them being heads of families, for whom prayer had been made for years past. Thus in two months' time the church has had a total accession of 340 souls, to say nothing of those who came in by letter. The regular Sabbath Morning Men's Meeting, on February 13, was attended by more than 700 men. One of the things that impress a stranger at any of the Bethany meetings is the very great willingness on the part of the members of the church to speak to the unconverted about their soul's salvation. In this they reflect the teaching of their leader and pastor.

The development of the large number of Christian workers has been a noticeable feature in the great awakenings elsewhere under the leadership of Dr. Chapman, such as at Indianapolis, Detroit, Pittsburgh, etc. In the memorable evangelistic campaign in Philadelphia in 1897, when more than 8,000 souls were added to the Protestant churches, great assistance in various parts of the city was rendered by the consecrated corps of Christian Workers from the Bethany Church.

BETHANY CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA—REV. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, PASTOR.

MR. WANAMAKER'S FIRST BIBLE-CLASS.

Discoveries in Babylonia.

Our readers will be interested in the recent return to this country of Dr. Herman V. Hilprecht, Professor of Assyrian and Semitic Philology in the University of Pennsylvania, with the result of whose Babylonian excavations they have been kept informed. These discoveries are of great value and importance, and the University of Pennsylvania is to be congratulated upon what it has accomplished. Yet, as a writer familiar with the subject reminds us, the promise of greater achievement remains. He says:

"The explorers examined only one set of mounds at Nippur. When it is remembered that Nippur was the sacred city of Babylonia, covered an area of several square miles, and that there are many mounds equal in size to that which was excavated, the possibilities of the future are enormous. It is stated by the archæologists of the expedition that the discoveries comprised the earliest known specimens of human inscription. And it is asserted by these gentlemen that some of the inscriptions point to an antiquity at least 7,000 years before Christ. Of course, in discoveries of this kind, there is always a wide margin to be left for possible error or miscalculation. The earliest records of the human race are found in the Pentateuch, and taking the chronology as given in the Book of Genesis, over two hundred different estimates have been made of the length of time between Adam and Abraham, differing from each other by thousands of years. The commonly accepted chronology is that of Archbishop Usher, who calculated the creation to have taken place about 4,000 years before Christ. The estimates made by others, however, vary from this considerably, and so far as can be ascertained from the published accounts of the discoveries at Nippur, nothing has been unearthed which controverts the truth of the Biblical narrative. According to the statements made by Prof. Hilprecht, several very important confirmations of the historical books of the Old Testament have been found. The older and middle eras of Babylonian history receive new light from his recent investigations in Constantinople. He has devoted much time to clearing up the mysteries around Jewish settlement in Babylonia after the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. He has shown that 'The River Chebar in the land of the Chaldeans,' by the waters of which Ezekiel, while the prophet was a captive among his people at Tel-adib, had the famous visions of the cherubim, which has hitherto been unidentified in cuneiform literature, is identical with the Kabari, a large navigable canal not far from Nippur, and not, as it had previously been believed by most commentators, a river many miles distant from it. Most of the Jews carried away by Nebuchadnezzar were settled in the neighborhood of Nippur, and Prof. Hilprecht has found a large number of Jewish names in these cuneiform tablets which are identical with those characteristic of the time of Ezra and Nehemiah."

IN DISGUISE.

I MET him to-day in the wintry street
The Christ on the Cross who died,
All hungered and cold in the wind and sleet
With bleeding forehead, and hands and feet,
And I blindly thrust him aside.

Had he only come with the crown of thorn,
Or the nail-prints ruby-red—
Had the palms that pleaded for alms but worn
Their wounds, I had not put by in scorn
His piteous plea for bread.

But idly now, and all in vain,
I grieve for the grace gone by,
And muse, "Might he only come again,
I'd pity his plea and ease his pain,
And hearken unto his cry."

Nay, nay, for the blind distinguisheth
The King with his robe and crown,
But only the humble eye of faith
Beholdeth Jesus of Nazareth
In the beggar's tattered gown.

I saw him not in the mendicant,
And I heeded not his cry;
Now, Christ in his infinite mercy grant
That the prayer I say in my day of want
Be not in scorn put by. —SELECTED.

THE MOODY MEETINGS.

Programme of the Great Revival Gatherings in Grand Central Palace Now Fully Arranged.

ON March 13 the series of revival meetings at the Grand Central Palace, New York, conducted by Mr. D. L. Moody, will begin. The daily programme will open with a prayer and praise service, from 10 to 11 o'clock, led by Mr. Moody himself. This will be made a special feature, and it is Mr. Moody's desire to have concerted prayer at the same hour and for the same purposes in churches and homes throughout the land, wherever people are willing to join. Those who are burdened or troubled for others are invited to send in requests, which will be presented to the meeting each morning. These letters should, in all cases, be addressed to D. L. Moody, Grand Central Palace, New York City.

Services will be held at every hour of the day, until ten o'clock at night, a different leader being in charge for each hour. According to present arrangements, Mr. Moody will speak at three and eight o'clock daily, in addition to leading the morning prayer meeting. Dr. J. W. Chapman, of Philadelphia; Dr. H. M. Wharton, of Baltimore; Dr. C. I. Scofield, pastor of Mr. Moody's church at East Northfield, Mass.; Dr. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn, and local pastors will be the other leaders.

The singing will be in charge of Prof. D. B. Towner, of Chicago, J. W. Burke, of New York, and F. H. Jacobs, of Brooklyn. The Mount Hermon Quartette, which was so well received at Rev. F. B. Meyer's meetings in Carnegie Hall last winter, will also sing throughout the entire week.

The regular programme will be suspended on Thursday, March 17, when the meetings will be arranged by John Willis Baer, Secretary of the Christian Endeavor Society. Dr. Clarke, founder of the C. E. movement, will be on hand, and it will be the occasion of a rally of all the local organizations.

The Edelweiss Domesticated.

Perhaps it is not generally known that the famous Edelweiss of the Alps is a hardy perennial that will succeed in any well-drained, sandy soil. True, its home is on Alpine heights, but daring tourists have found it and brought it home, not merely in pressed petals between the leaves of a sketch-book, but as a living plant for American soil, and as such it can be obtained from florists. Of all the "everlastings" this is the most poetical by reason of its history, a history often tragic, according to Alpine folk-lore. The white, star-shaped flower, growing amid the snow of almost inaccessible peaks, was an emblem of deathless devotion, and as such Swiss lovers sought it at the risk of life and limb, as offerings to their sweethearts. Sometimes, the story goes, the alpenstock of the adventurous climber found no sure resting-place, and he whose staff it was, slipped into icy abysses from which he came not back again with word of love or flower of Edelweiss for his beloved.

It is a pretty thought when we reflect that as this little flower of perilous heights can be grown in common gardens so the deathless devotion which it typifies can blossom in every wayside home in safe and easy reach of even childhood's fingers.

An Ancient Picture.

A discovery of much interest is reported from Rome. Signor Marucchi, a well-known Italian archæologist, has found on the wall of a chamber in the palace of Tiberius, on the Palatine Hill, a "graffito," or scratched drawing, with an inscription representing the crucifixion of Christ. The drawing gives us the cross with the soldiers surrounding it, and under each soldier, his name in Latin. It is suggested that the sketch is the work of a soldier who was present at the crucifixion. That the drawing is really by a contemporary, and an actual witness of the death of Christ, is of course conceivable, though it may prove of a later date.

The Sunday School

John the Baptist Beheaded.

Sunday School Lesson for March 20. Matt. 14: 1-12. Golden Text, Prov. 4: 23.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE righteous and the wicked are the instruments in God's hand of ripening each other, "The contradiction of sinners against himself" (Heb. 12: 3), which was the daily cross and the daily portion of our Lord, was provision for him to manifest under such tests the heart of the Father who dwelt in him (John 14: 10), in enduring "with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath, fitted to destruction" (Romans 9: 22). It was proved in his life that not one trace of enmity or retaliation existed. "God is love," was proved in him who was God "manifest in the flesh."

In the same way King Herod and John the Baptist served, under the over-ruling hand of God, to ripen one another; the one for endless, unspeakable glory, the other for destruction. The ministry of Jesus was at its height; multitudes were hanging upon his teaching, the sick were being healed, and his popularity was Satan's instrument to arouse the jealousy and enmity of the unspiritual religious teachers of the day. They had no such mighty words, for "his word was with power," and "never man spake like this man;" "for he taught them as one that had authority and not as the scribes." They had no such works of power to show as he had; for the blind received their sight, the lame walked, the lepers were cleansed, the deaf heard, the dead were raised up, and the poor had the Gospel preached unto them.

It was at this time that King Herod heard of the fame of Jesus. God had sought the soul of this man through his servant, John the Baptist, but Herod had never yielded to God. He had feared John, but had not feared God; he had seen the holiness and righteousness of John's life, but had not come face to face with a holy God.

How many would-be believers are of the same order; they are like the Jews who were willing for a season to rejoice in John the Baptist's light (John 5: 35), and yet crucified him to whom John bore witness, and whose forerunner he declared himself to be! How many stop short of a revelation of God to their own souls! And yet God cannot draw nigh to men, even through his servants, without bringing a great responsibility upon them. Things could not stop as they were; Herod must go forward or backward. He was guilty of the sin of marrying Herodias, his brother's wife. What should John the Baptist do? He had the ear of the king; should he remain quiet? It would greatly offend the king if his sin were told him to his face. But the man of the desert, whose meat was locusts and wild honey, and whose raiment was camel's hair, had nothing to gain or to lose from the world or worldlings; and in the cause of his God he bore witness to the king, "It is not lawful for thee to have her."

The sin of the king was the occasion for the faithfulness of the prophet. But again the faithfulness of the prophet was the occasion for the enmity of the king. The words of John told upon Herod, and he seemed to be a penitent until they touched the sin which he was unwilling to quit. And now he must choose between the prophet of God and his abominable sin, which gave license to sin in his people. "Herod the tetrarch, being reproved by [John] for Herodias his brother Philip's wife, and for all the evils which Herod had done, added yet this above all, that he shut up John in prison" (Luke 3: 19, 20). It was a step backward, and now the guilty king was on an inclined plane, and there was no more stopping. He took on himself the awful responsibility of closing the mouth of the man under whom God had convicted him. And now again John the Baptist was put to the test. He heard in the prison the works of Jesus, his power seemed to be unlimited; he must know that his faithful forerunner was in prison; surely he would employ his miraculous gifts in releasing him. He had declared in Nazareth how he was anointed "to preach deliverance to the captives . . . to set at liberty them that are bruised" (Luke 4: 18). Whom should he set at liberty if it were not his faithful witness and forerunner? But day after day passed and no deliverance came. It was a heavier test than all which had gone before: was it indeed of God that the wicked Herod should have the last word, and that the Messiah should apparently play into his hand?

At last it became unbearable, and John sent some of his disciples who were probably as perplexed as he was, to ask the question, "Art thou he that should come, or look we for another?" And John had his answer, "Blessed is he which shall not be offended in me" (Matt. 11: 6). And it may be that former light which had dawned upon him returned with new power: "He that hath the bride is the bridegroom," and the vision of a bride who should follow her Lord in humiliation, in shame, in fellowship with his sufferings, may have dawned anew upon him. This vision of the bride, the only one in all the four Gospels, and of himself as the friend of the bridegroom (John 3: 28, 29), had made him utter words which must have come home to him now with redoubled force, "He must increase, but I must decrease" (John 3: 30).

John was being anointed for martyrdom. Meanwhile the wicked Herod was being ripened for destruction. He had sold his soul through the deliberate silencing of John the Baptist. God keep us from the awful sin of stifling conviction! When, later on, Jesus was sent by Pilate to the same Herod for judgment, "he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him. Then he questioned him in many words" (Luke 23: 8, 9), but in vain. He who silences John the Baptist can exact neither word nor work from Jesus. And now nothing remained but the last step of the downward ladder in his relations with the holy man of God. Satan was in power with the man who had rejected God in his messenger. Herod's birthday came, and a royal entertainment in which the daughter of Herodias danced: and the king, having none to keep the door of his lips, in the most unguarded way, promised with an oath to give the damsel whatsoever she would ask. It had been an arranged thing between her and her wicked mother; and without a moment's hesitation, she said, "Give me here John Baptist's head in a charger."

"The king was sorry," but it was too late. He had not intended to go that length in sin. But his oath had been in public: the guests had heard it; he could not draw back, his word bound him. And so, against his conscience, and knowing that he displeased God, "he commanded that it be given her." The last thread which left a hope for his miserable soul was cut, and the doom of the sinner was sealed by his own hand. The unwearied daughter received the coveted and revolting gift, and bore it to her unwomanly and revengeful mother. And the prophet was prepared for martyrdom. He had learned to be "not offended," not scandalized, whatever happened. He had learned the lesson of the cross, and shared it before-hand with his master. His martyrdom was only gain to him; he had fulfilled his mission. If at one side, or bound up with our life, there may be some Herod, some one through whom we are especially put to a test, let us never look upon it as a hindrance. The more we are tested, the more we are perfected.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

HEROD'S career presents the most important lessons that can be inculcated on the minds of young people. It shows how a man with magnificent opportunities and with good impulses, may be dragged to ruin and everlasting infamy by one evil association. Mark's story of it (Mark 6: 17-29), even more clearly than Matthew's account, shows how the man was enslaved. One sin brought disaster upon him, and that sin was the result of a condition, to which every person is liable. He did not have his propensities and the impulses of his physical nature under control. His infatuation for Herodias he knew to be wrong, yet he yielded to it, and in doing so he rang the knell of his life. The whole train of miserable disasters sprang from that weakness, which a stronger man would have overcome at any cost to himself. When any person does a thing which he knows he ought not to do, he becomes a slave, and is driven to do other things that he hates to do, and is ashamed of doing. The one supreme lesson to be impressed on every child at the outset of his career, is that for his own sake he should obey the dictates of his conscience and should resist temptation.

"His head was brought and given to the damsel: and she brought it to her mother."

For Herodias' sake. Mark says that Herod feared John, knowing that he was a just and holy man, and when he heard him he did many things and heard him gladly. It must have been a great privilege to hear such a preacher as John was. Doubtless Herod was a better man for hearing him. We do not know what things they were that John persuaded him to do, but we may be sure they were good things. But he would not give up Herodias, and that was one thing about which John was very firm. She had left her husband to live with Herod, and John denounced that crime. It is always the dearest thing in life that is the most fatal, if it is a wrong thing. Mr. Moody relates that at one city where he was holding meetings, a young man of dissipated habits became very earnest in his attendance at the inquiry meetings. He w very anxious to be saved. He became total abstainer, he gave up going to t theatre, gave up smoking, and reform his life in many ways, but still seemed u able to find peace. Mr. Moody could n understand it. He talked with him a prayed with him, but without succe "There is something you are keepi back," Mr. Moody said to him. Th the young man confessed. He was pa sionately fond of cards. He could n bring himself to give up his favor game. "Well," Mr. Moody said, "y will have to decide. If you love anythi so well you cannot give it up for Chris sake, you will never be a Christian," a so it proved. He was held by his fa fascination and went back to his ways. Herod would not give up He dias, and she ruined him.

The king was sorry. He saw that had been outwitted. For a long ti Herodias, fearing that John wou eventually succeed in separating her fr Herod, had wanted him killed, but co not gain her point. She had succeed in getting Herod to shut him up in pris but she did not feel safe while he liv So she tried this crafty trick. Knowi that Herod would be off his guard wh he had taken a quantity of wine, she s her daughter in to dance. Usually a entertainment of this kind was done slaves. She counted on t delight Herod would feel the piquancy of having princess of royal blood such a thing. She did n shrink from degrading l daughter. He would be lil ly to make some rash pr ise, which his pride wo not let him break. It h pened as she expected; s sprung the trap, and the ki feeling himself caught, w sorry. Many a man has pented as Jephthah did, making a rash vow. He had limited it only to half of his kingdom, l some men do not put e that limit on their promi when they are infatuat Some give up all their ki dom, their souls, as well their wealth. Few who m a rash vow escape so ea as the woman did in Oriental story that is rela of Mohammed. A wom rode into his presence o dromedary. She had b attacked by robbers, w had burned her tent a tried to kill her. She h escaped from them, but l been pursued. As her sw dromedary carried h across the desert with murderous enemies beh her in hot pursuit, she l vowed that if she esca them and reached Moha med's camp in safety would offer the dromedary sacrifice. When she entered his presen she was sorry to kill the beast, to wh speed she owed her life. But for l vow's sake she was about to kill it, wh Mohammed interposed. "The beast yours no longer," he said. "You offe before me and I accept it. It is mi and I give it back to you."

Give me here John Baptist's head. seems almost incredible that a wom should have asked such an awful thi but Herodias was not the first woman crave such a ghastly reward. Abo seventy years before the murder of Jo the Baptist, three men were closeted gether in Rome. They were Octavi Antony, and Lepidus. They were m ing an alliance to act together. Octav and Lepidus each insisted on certain c ditions which were agreed to. Ant made but one, and that one he made the behest of his wife. She hated great orator Cicero and had begged her husband that he might be kill Octavius could not have Antony's h on any other terms. Antony stood fi to please his wife, and Octavius yield The aged orator was found and behead It is recorded of Fulvia, Antony's w that when the head of Cicero was sen her, she drew out the tongue that l thrilled the senate and the city, and thr her hairpin through it.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Lonely Nebraska Homes.

e on the Great Frontier Cattle Ranches —How a Vast Cattle Run Looks.

UR readers have from time to time been made familiar with phases of life in the West, where the missionaries of the American Sunday-hool Union have faithfully sought and ind new fields of service in the hearts d homes of pioneers who had left their tive States to try (and often, alas! to npt) their fortunes in strange lands. ne of the most interesting fields of reli-ous occupation is found in Nebraska: the story of the State itself is fascinating. is, as we know, a comparatively young ember of the sisterhood of States, hav-g been admitted to the Union as late as 67. The first house in Omaha, the incipal town, was built in 1854. But since ebraska has come "a great ghway of na-ons, and the ommerce of ccident and rient has inbed to and o over the ountains of merica and owed through e Golden Gate the Northern acific," its ains are bet-er known. Land of broad vers or water iley." it has een well called, r it is inter-ected by gen-rous streams; nd since ranch-ien have taken ossession of its ild lands. rassy meadows feed lowing herds, and eep are pastured where once the fox, ie coyote, and the rattlesnake held sway. Especially commendable is the progress hich education has made, for the State s generous in its appropriation to this ause, and the system is quite thorough; nd charitable, reformatory, and penal nstitutions in the large cities are most ommendable. Yet this system cannot et be so complete as to reach the ob-cure and sparsely-settled districts, where he Sunday-school missionary penetrates. We recently published the picture of a Sunday-school, ten years old now, and the irst established on the Dismal River.

HERDERS GOING HOME.

A CATTLE RANGE ON THE NEBRASKA PLAINS.

In this issue we give the picture of a anchman's home and of a herd on a branch of the loup. The ranchman's life is ot all the freedom, daring and adventure hat cheap literature has made it out. It s a life of labor, of isolation, of care and esponsibility. There is also the native ocust to reckon with as a constant factor; nd then one never knows when to expect visitation from his dreadful cousin, the aloptinus spretus, or hateful locust, as he occasional pest of Western agricul-urists is called. The ranchman's dwell-ng may be only a dug-out, or it may be a og-cabin; if he is fortunate he may have a weather-boarded establishment of sev-ral rooms. Grouped around it will be he necessary horse-corral, and at further listance the cow-corral, where the stock is branded. There must be stables and cow-sheds and hay-ricks; and perhaps a sep-arate cabin for his assistants. Most of the work is done on horse-back, and usu-ally a number of wiry little ponies are in evidence. The ranchman's wife and daugh-ter and little son will have their ponies and be quite wise in the care of calves, of horses, and cattle generally.

In the house, little touches of comfort and beauty here and there will show that the wife has not forgotten the ways of her Eastern home. Perhaps there will be a shelf or table with books upon it. The missionary will try to see that a Bible is among them. Doubtless the wife has brought her Bible along with her; and if her household are praying folk, they will greet with great gladness the visit of the man of God, for unlike their brethren in the East, church, Sunday School and pastoral privileges are not within their daily reach.

Heart-Burdens.

There are many women bearing heavy burdens all through their lives, who by coming to Christ and casting all their cares upon him, would find welcome relief. Mr. Moody, speaking on this subject recently, said to his audience:

The first thing you and I were taught to do was to look. The mother takes the child to the window; she sees the father coming and points and says to the child: "Look! look!" The next thing she teaches him is to come. You were all taught to come before you could talk or remember. A woman came to me once and said: "Mr. Moody, I would greatly like to become a Christian; but I am so hard-hearted." I said: "My good woman, did he say: 'You soft-hearted people, come?' Nothing of the kind. He said: 'Come unto me'—all; black hearts, vile hearts, corrupt hearts, deceitful hearts—all." If your heart is hard, who will soften it? You can't. The harder the heart the more need of coming. Isn't that so? The harder, the viler, the more deceitful the heart the more need there is for the Saviour; so come along and get rest. If you can't come as a saint, come as a sinner; if you can't run, walk; if you can't walk, creep to him; but come. I see some people smiling. They say: "I am glad Mr. Moody is giving that to the unconverted; that is what they need." Now, I am after you Christians. Now listen. There isn't one out of ten of you that isn't laboring under a terrible delusion. You have an idea that Christ is a sin bearer—that he will bear our sins all the way; but it has never dawned on you that Christ is a burden-bearer. Come with your burdens, your cares.

Hidden Blessings.

Many of our troubles, as we humanly view them, seem incapable of alleviation, whereas if we could only have faith, we might find them transformed into blessings. A schoolmaster, with a high character for uprightness, fell ill, and soon all his children became ill, too. When sickness at length left the house a large sum was owing for medical attendance. When the envelope containing it eventually arrived, he put it aside unopened, fearing to read the amount! At last he broke open the envelope and found only a stamped receipt for the sum due. So, if we exercise faith and take God at his word, we may realize that at the moment of our sorest extremity, he is ready to provide for us means of escape from our troubles.

Family Loyalty to the Church.

A Christian pair, husband and wife, after they were converted joined the Church, says a writer in the Religious Telescope. They resided thirty years in the same neighborhood where they were born and raised, and were always devout, earnest in their religious life, and strictly loyal to the church of their choice. They were not bigoted or selfish; they entertained ministers of other denominations; they attended the services of other churches when they could do so without neglecting their own; but their service and devotion were given to God and the branch of the Church into which they had been providentially called at the beginning of their religious life. God blessed them in their home. They reared a large family of children, every one of whom in due time joined the church with their parents and became honored, useful men and women. Finally the parents died; but though almost forty years have passed, their native neighborhood and almost the whole county is still fragrant with the wholesome influence of their devout, consistent, Christian life. They were like the oak, stable, sturdy, generous; and hundreds were helped to a better life by the silent influence they exerted for God and practical righteousness.

Idleness and Industry.

Mankind has come to recognize the truth that in the great battle of life, the youth who is born to wealth and who is not trained to self-support, has really fewer advantages than he who, though born in poverty, is educated to become proficient in some industrial calling that will always serve to earn him a living. A philosophic writer has said: "Every boy born into the world should be put in the way of earning an honest independence. There are but three ways of living—by working, by begging or by stealing. Every productive occupation which adds anything to the capital of mankind, if followed assiduously, with a desire to understand everything connected with it, is an ascending stair whose summit is nowhere, and from whose ascending steps the horizon of knowledge perpetually enlarges."

Analogy.

AS a morning sunbeam
On a drop of dew,
With its brilliant radiance
Passing through and through.
So the love of Jesus
On the human heart
Fills it with a glory,
Illumining every part.

—CHAS. FRANCIS ADAMS.

A MOTHER'S VISION.

(Written for "The Christian Herald.")

I MUSING gazed on my darling's face,
As with little hands clasped in childish grace,
He murmured, "I lay me," soft and low,
And I asked myself, will it always be so?
Will he ever thus, at the close of day,
Kneel reverently down and humbly pray,
Asking God's tender, loving care,
Asking his Saviour's love to share?

Or as the changing years flit o'er my boy,
Will the pleasures of earth his mind employ?
Will those fleeting years as they come and go
Take away the sweet trusting babe I know,
And leave in his stead a man grown old,
In the struggle for power and greed of gold;
A man from whose heart all thoughts of heaven
And love of God have long been driven?
I smiled at my fears as half asleep,
He murmured again, "My soul to keep",
And the white lids closed o'er the tired eyes
As the curly head on the pillow lies;
And I saw down the vista of coming years,
As they glided along mid smiles and tears,
A man so gifted with every grace
Of heart and mind that o'er his face
The light of joy and peace and love,
Lay like a halo from above;
A man to his Master's service given
To guide the wanderers steps to heaven.
As when pebbles into a pool we throw,
And the circles wider and wider grow,
So the waves of his influence I could see
Reaching the shores of eternity;
And the face o'er which the radiance shone
Was my darling's, older and wiser grown.
The vision passed, and I raised my eyes,
Tear-be-dimmed to the evening skies,
As I pleaded for wisdom and guidance divine,
To guide to that manhood, this boy of mine.
Through the shoals of temptation and breakers of sin
That the same glorious service he might enter in;
And I patiently wait till mine eyes shall behold,
The future fulfill what the vision foretold.

"The Needle's Eye."

A READER of this journal (Mrs. Sarah E. L., of Newtonville, Mass., writes us as follows:

In a late issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, a little girl asks what Christ meant by the "needle's eye." I was reminded of a course of lectures given some years ago in Tremont Temple, Boston, by a lady who was born and brought up in Syria. She was frequently the guest of the Arab sheiks, and the country, people, their manners and customs, were as familiar to her as our city and people are to us. She was assisted in her lectures by a number of gentlemen and ladies personating different characters, costumed accordingly, and many picturesque scenes from the Bible were enacted before the audience, making an interesting and instructive exhibition. At one of the lectures there was the representation of the large gate of an eastern city. In that gate was cut a smaller one, square, and a foot or more from the ground. This was the "needle's eye," and took its name from the needle used by the Bedouins in making their coarse haircloth tents. A piece of wood was made pointed at one end, and flattened at the other, and in this a square hole was cut for the eye. A merchant with a camel loaded with rich goods from Damascus or elsewhere, arrives at the city, but too late to enter—the gate is closed. What is he to do? If he remains outside he will be robbed and murdered before morning. He knocks for admittance. The watchman goes upon the wall and demands, "Who's there? Where do you come from? What do you bring?" and having received satisfactory answers, proceeds to open the smaller gate, or "needle's eye," but the loaded camel cannot get through. Everything must be taken off, and even then it is difficult, for the camel is either too stupid or too stubborn to do what a horse or a donkey would do at once without any trouble, and he roars as he is pushed and pulled and beaten, till he is finally made to go through; then he is reloaded and the merchant proceeds to his destination in the city.

The more we feel the high, stern-featured beauty
Of plain devotedness to duty,
Steadfast and still, nor paid with mortal praise,
But finding amplest recompense
In work done squarely, and unwasted days.

The Dead War Steamer.

SELDOM has our nation been more awfully stunned than by the destruction of the war-ship Maine. The heart of the world has been wrung with sympathy for the wounded and dying, and for the bereft households. Woe! Woe! Woe! Let united and universal prayer go up for the broken-hearted fathers and mothers and wives of those who perished in that, one of the worst calamities of the centuries. Before these words get into type it will probably be made plain whether casualty or diabolism wrought this ruin. It was at the first a mystery why this disaster should have been permitted, but it seems plain enough now. It probably was allowed to show us something of the horror of war, that we might be induced to keep out of it. Let war be declared, and instead of two hundred and sixty slain, there would be ten thousand slain—perhaps twenty thousand slain—instead of two hundred and sixty desolate homes—ten thousand, and perhaps twenty thousand, homes in blackness of darkness. Peace! Let there be peace!

Sympathy for Other Occupations.

WE do well sometimes to halt in our work and not inquisitively but sympathetically look over to the work of others. None but those who get behind the scenes can appreciate the weariesses that are required in the making up a great daily newspaper. Its demands for "copy" come with such fearful regularity. Newspaper writers must produce just so much, whether they feel like it or not. In summer publishers close up for vacation four or eight weeks. Newspapers cannot close for four weeks except they close in bankruptcy or extinction. So many thousands of subscribers to instruct or please. The newspaper corps must on one side to scrutinize the editorial chairs the public on the other side is supposed to lounge. So many patient men who do not think themselves properly appreciated on the press. And yet there is something fascinating to make editors and reporters responsible for their own addled brains.

A great newspaper office is an army, but though there must be captains over companies and colonels over regiments, the commander in chief is held responsible for all marching on or falling back. Under the pressure, newspaper men seem to go before their time. Once in a while we see a veteran like Thurlow Weed or William Cullen Bryant or Erastus Brooks or James Watson Webb lingering down to a healthy old age; but it was in all such cases because they shifted the chief burden to other shoulders.

But all occupations have toils enough. Multitudes make a failure of life under the delusion that if they can get something else to do, it will be easier. They cross over and find as many disadvantages or worriments in the new occupation as in the old. Then they cross to something else and they spend most of their time on the ferry between vocations. Our young people might as well know, first as last, that success in any calling demands drudgery, sacrifice, tug and push. If you find yourself in the wrong business, of course leave it; but do not leave it because your present duties are tiresome and exhausting. We are all under the old curse, "By the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat thy bread." But by cheerful application to duty we may turn that which was a grinding anathema into a beautiful benediction so that the people who work the hardest are generally the happiest. But a mechanic, whose work blisters his hands, would like to have the work of a student. He becomes a student, and now he has just as many blisters as he had before, but they are on the brain instead of the hand. The weaver's foot gets tired swinging the shuttle, and he becomes an artist, and now the pressure is on the eye and hand. Harnessed we must be to a load and the collar sometimes will gall. Then, if you are Christians, will come the saint's everlasting rest.

Patience, ye men of business, all ye members of professions, all ye disciples of mechanism. Not long shall be the strain. Life seems long at the start; it does not seem so long at the last. The day seems long at the sunrise; not so long at noon; very short at the sunset. At twenty-five years of age life seems almost interminable; at fifty years of age it is a handbreadth; at seventy, it is a tale that is told.

War's Barbarities.

AT an awful price of blood and suffering the world is becoming acquainted with the regions that for ages seemed little more than a myth; and nations that stood away back in the dim corridors of history come out on the stage to act a bloody part in this Nineteenth Century. It seems to me that all those who know how to pray should be more and more earnest in petition for the reign of universal peace. Surely, men die fast enough without organized slaughter. The hearses come soon enough through the cemetery gates and the pestilences cut wide enough swath. Let the sword be scabbarded. God did not put inventiveness in the human brain that it might fashion some new style of rifle or some farther reaching "swamp angel," but to contrive new spindles to weave and better architecture to shelter and swifter modes of intercommunication.

The reports of the war-like outlook in the East strike us as barbaric, but all wars are barbaric. They may start about a technicality or a national misunderstanding, but before the first battle is over, the whole scene rolls back into the dark ages, and it becomes wholesale butchery, and war is only murder on a large scale. You cannot kill a man in a Christian way. Oh, what a world this will be to live in when the chief question with all individuals and governments is how to save life, rather than how to destroy it; how to make the world happy instead of how to make it miserable, and all men shall put into practice that sublime principle which Christ announced in his Olivetic discourse: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets."

The day shall come, and we have a right to cheer each other with the glorious anticipation

CUBA.

WHEN the rosy children gather
'Round the happy board,
When the barns are filled with plenty,
And the bins are stored,
When the good wife, smiling, greets you,
And the home is bright,
Falls there not a wing of shadow
Over all the light?

Don't you hear the mother's sobbing,
All across the sea?
Don't you catch the piteous throbbing
Of an agony
Such as only want and famine
Stark and cruel bring?
Don't you feel through every pulse-beat
All that suffering?

Babies crying out with hunger,
Gasping to their death,
Old men mute in desolate weakness,
Childhood faint for breath;
'Round them horrors gaunt and spectral,
Near them sorrows pale—
Don't you hear the cry of Cuba
Borne on every gale?

When the rosy children gather
'Round the happy board,
When the barn is filled with plenty,
And the bins are stored,
Think of Cuba! Help the starving,
Send the children bread—
Fight the angel of destruction—
Let the poor be fed.

ANSWERS ABOUT CUBA.

1. MONEY is always preferable to goods, because money can be invested here in New York City in the very articles which are best adapted to the current status of relief work. For instance, while corn may meet the requirements at this particular time, next week clothing or medicines or potatoes may prove much more acceptable. Therefore, we think that money should have the preference wherever and whenever practicable.

2. MONEY received is always invested here in this country in goods which are shipped free of all expense to Havana, from which central point the distribution is made in Cuba, under the supervision of Consul-General Lee and Clara Barton, by the American Consular agents.

3. NO DUTY has ever been imposed on such goods since it was understood by and between the Spanish government and the United States that relief supplies would be admitted free, notwithstanding statements to the contrary.

4. CONSUL-GENERAL LEE and the president of the American National Red Cross, Miss Clara Barton, now laboring in Cuba under the auspices of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, agree that the famine supplies are admirably handled, carefully watched, and that the distribution is carried on as efficiently, promptly and honestly as could be done anywhere.

5. RAILROAD companies carry supplies intended for the relief of Cuban famine sufferers free of charge, if requested to do so by the Central Cuban Relief Committee, 401 Temple Court, New York City. Intending shippers, therefore, should invariably address either THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, or the Central Relief Committee, 401 Temple Court, New York, notifying either of these agencies of the nature and quantities of supplies for shipment, and whenever it is practicable, instructions will be communicated by wire, or, in any event, by return mail. Do not attempt to ship goods before you are fully instructed, as such action is likely to entail vast expense and bring about much confusion.

6. IT IS NOT necessary that you lose your claim to public acknowledgment in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD because you may ship through the Cuban Central Relief Committee, but of course we cannot take cognizance of any shipments of which we are not acquainted. Therefore, if you desire THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to publish name of contributor and articles contributed, send us full particulars, stating when and what goods were shipped, and to whom consigned.

7. IF FAMINE supplies can be shipped to better advantage than their equivalents in money, our friends will favor us by confining their contributions whenever practicable to the following articles:

Medicines for fevers, principally quinine; hard bread, flour, cornmeal, cereal preparations, bacon, rice, lard, potatoes, beans, peas, salt fish, canned goods, particularly nourishing soups; meat extracts and condensed milk.

8. IF FOR any reason, it may be necessary to make immediate shipment of goods, and the agent will undertake to move the goods without specific instructions to that effect from Headquarters, be sure to consign the goods as follows:

CONSUL GENERAL LEE,
"Cuban Relief, HAVANA, CUBA.
Care of "Plant System," Agent, (either) Mobile, Montgomery or Tampa.

In addition the nature of contents, the val and weight, must be marked on each packag

9. ALL THE express companies have c sented to carry packages intended for t Cuban relief work at one-half the usual ra on condition that such packages be pre-pa If the contribution you intend forwarding too small to warrant sending it by freight, a you wish to send it by express, direct expre packages just the same as contributions in t preceding paragraph.

10. MONEY CAN be safely remitted postal order, express order, bank draft, registered mail. The risk of forwardi money by ordinary letter mail is not ve great, and we think that whenever any oth method would involve trouble or delay, th the ordinary mail may be safely employe We ourselves would not hesitate to se money that way, but of course there is a lit more risk than in the case of registered let or the other methods named. Always addr your money:

Waiting for the Verdict.

NOTHING of late years has done more to deserve the respect of the world for the American character than the attitude of our people in the matter of the Maine disaster. They have refused to be moved by the hysterical shrieking of journals which have stooped to falsehood and calumny to inflame the popular mind. With the calmness and dignity of conscious strength, they have waited patiently the issue of the inquiry as to the cause of the disaster, in the steady confidence that the President and his advisers will know when and how to act in the national interest. Doubtless there are some who would have liked to see our government declare war on Spain immediately after the disaster, just as there are some in a locality, shocked by a great crime, who advocate lynching instead of the orderly process of trial, but for the greater part, such men have been shamed into silence. The Government proceeds with a due sense of its responsibility to collect the evidence and if it finds that a wrong has been done us, it will demand reparation with the majesty of a calm self-respecting nation. This duty the people expect of the Government and no one honestly doubts that it will be faithfully performed: The week that has passed has added comparatively little to our knowledge of the cause of the appalling calamity, but the undeniable facts that have been disclosed as to the discipline on board the ship, and the present condition of the wreck, have tended to eliminate the theory of an accidental explosion from within. Such explosions as there were on board, appear to have been the consequences, rather than the cause of the disaster. On the other hand, the representative of Spain at Washington explicitly declares that there is no mine, nor submarine defense of any kind, in the harbor of Havana. If this statement is true—and we cannot conceive of such a statement being made by the representative of a civilized government if it were false — the most serious cause for war is removed. It was the possibility entertained by many of the Maine having been destroyed by a mine under the control of the Spanish Government, which constituted the real ground for hostilities. It would appear at the present time of writing, as if the possible causes for the calamity were narrowed down to the plots of private conspirators, whose identity Spain should help us in discovering. We have the right, too, to expect from her an indemnity proportioned to the degree of negligence she showed in the control of villains among her subjects. At present, however, and until the Court of Inquiry has finished its work, the one duty is patience and forbearance from threats and menaces. The advice of the preacher is as true now as it was in his day:

The patient in spirit is better than the proud in spirit. Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry: for anger resteth in the bosom of fools (Eccles. 7: 8.)

A Prisoner Foiled.

A daring plot to escape from the Tombs of New York was detected a few days ago. The Warden says that in the entire history of the old prison there was no record of a plot so clever or more likely to have succeeded. One of the prisoners, who has been committed for larceny, and may be indicted for murder, was suddenly removed from the cell he has occupied for three months past to another part of the prison. The cell was immediately searched, and in it the officers found evidence of the plot. The bars which held the bolt of the lock in place were cut nearly through, and concealed in the cell were six saws, with which the work had been done. There was also a pass belonging to a visitor, which permitted one person to enter and leave the prison. A light-colored suit of clothes, a razor, and a pair of shears and a number of other articles for use were hidden in the bed. The prisoner confessed his intended plan of operations. He proposed to finish cutting the bars, which could be done in five minutes. He would then shave off the moustache and beard he ordinarily wears and exchange his dark suit for the light one. He would emerge from his cell to the gallery, mingle with the visitors and secure exit with the visitor's pass, which had been sent to him from outside. He was much crestfallen when discovered. He said he had worked night and day for three months to saw through the bars of the lock on his prison door. His hands were calloused and covered with blisters, showing how much labor it had involved. He evidently dreads the penalty of his wrongdoing, and he has greater cause to dread the retribution which awaits him at the end of his life. If he is as anxious to escape that as he was to get out of prison, a better way is open to him.

A Prodigal Prince.

Romantic stories are told of a young man now living in Brooklyn, N. Y. and studying at the Long Island College Hospital. It is stated on the authority of reports received from Vienna that the young student is a prince of high lineage and the son of a former prime minister of Austria. The prime minister died in 1888, leaving the bulk of his estate to his eldest son, but a large fortune to his younger son, the young man who is now working for a physician's diploma in Brooklyn. The fortune was speedily spent in dissipation, in gifts to actors and actresses, in lavish entertainments and expensive pleasures. When his resources came to an end he applied to the moneylenders, who, knowing how distinguished and wealthy was the family to which he belonged, readily supplied him with all the money he needed. With part of this money the prince continued his meteoric career and with part embarked in speculation, hoping to retrieve his position, but only succeeding in making bad worse. Finally, pursued by his creditors, whose claims are said to aggregate half a million dollars, the prince left the scene of his dissipation and came to America, where he is living a quiet life of hard study, in which, according to a published interview, he declares himself happier than he was in his life of luxury and vice. We trust that the young man, having had the resolution to turn his back on his sins, may learn now how he may obtain pardon for them.

If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins (1 John 1 : 9).

Under the Cocaine Curse

Kentucky journals report a deplorable case of fatal results from the cocaine habit. A man who had once been a prominent physician of Louisville lay dead in a sanitarium in New Albany, where he had been taken in the hope that he could be cured. Two weeks previously he and his daughter were found unconscious in one room of a miserable tenement without food, fire or bed-clothes. Both were far gone, but they were taken to the city hospital and responded to treatment enough to justify hopes of complete recovery. The daughter, though a skeleton, and with a body covered with sores, is only twenty-six years old, and will get well, but the father's vitality was so exhausted that he had a fatal relapse and succumbed. Fifteen years ago he was a wealthy physician, living in fine style and greatly respected. He contracted the cocaine habit and taught it to his daughter and wife, and the family sank into poverty and degradation. For years they subsisted on charity. The husband and father took great quantities of the drug and resisted every attempt of his brother physicians to reclaim him. The significant fact about his case is that he knew as the ordinary man would not, the danger lurking in the use of the drug. It shows that knowledge alone is insufficient to save a man from failing. The physician was like many who educated in pious homes know the evil of sin, but love it. As Christ said to the men of his day their knowledge increased their guilt.

If ye were blind ye should have no sin, but now ye say, we see, therefore your sin remaineth (John 9 : 41).

A Mother's Self-Sacrifice.

A press dispatch from Victoria, B. C., tells a pathetic story of an Indian mother's devotion to her babe. She was one of a party of Indians who started on the Dyea trail from Lake Linderman to the coast. They had traveled only a short distance when a storm came on which completely obliterated the trail. They plodded on desperately over the mountain, taking the precaution to rope themselves together. But one woman, carrying a babe strapped to her back, could not keep up with the party and eventually the rope that held her in contact with them separated and she was left behind. The others succeeded in reaching a white prospector's camp in safety. It was several hours afterward that the poor mother's dead body was found. She had unstrapped her child from her back and had taken off most of her own garments to wrap it in. She had struggled along almost up to her waist in the snow for a considerable distance, carefully protecting her child from the cold with her own clothing. When she was found frozen to death, her child was still clasped in her arms and was warm and full of life. She had given her own life that it might live. Greater proof of her love she could not have given, but even this is surpassed by the love God showed for the world.

But God commendeth his love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us. (Rom. 5 : 8).

Furniture Built-up.

A trade journal published in Michigan gives a curious account of the way in which mahogany furniture is produced. It says that a very small proportion of the chairs and tables purporting to be mahogany is of that wood throughout. "The mahogany is only skin deep, and if all that enters into the construction of the average bedroom suit could be brought together there would scarcely be enough of it to make a respectable stick of stove wood. Modern furniture is not solid, but is built up. It has a body of elm, ash or basswood, with an outer layer of mahogany and this outer layer or surface is so thin that thirty-two layers of it will make scarcely an inch. In some classes of work it would require one hundred or even two hundred layers to make an inch." The ordinary mahogany log might, when plain sawed and polished, be more substantial, but would not look near so handsome as the veneer surface which can be glued to any kind of wood. Reputations are frequently built up in the same way. It is so much easier to put on the outward appearance of sanctity than to be transformed in heart. Christ had to complain of characters in his day which still survive among us.

Even so ye outwardly appear righteous unto men but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity (Matt. 23 : 28).

Sinking a Burning Ship.

The heroic method of sinking a ship to put out a fire was taken last week by the captain of the William Law, a vessel just starting for Shanghai, China. She had completed her cargo, and had been towed to the lower bay of New York, where she waited the night, the captain intending to sail at dawn. During the night one of the men saw a thread of smoke rising from the hold and at once reported it. An examination was made, and it was found that the hold was full of dense smoke. A boat was lowered, and the mate, with four picked men was rowed rapidly ashore to give the alarm. Three fire-boats were quickly pouring streams of water into the hold, but apparently without gaining control of the fire. Among the cargo were a large number of cases of oil, which it was feared would explode as soon as the fire reached them. The danger was so imminent that it was decided as the safest course to sink the ship. Measures were accordingly taken, and in a short time she was resting on the bottom. After spending twelve hours there a wrecking steamer pumped her out and she was raised to the surface with no serious injury to her hull. It will be necessary to remove some of the damaged cargo, but as soon as that has been done the Law will resume her voyage to China. Under ordinary circumstances the sinking of a ship is regarded as a calamity, but in this case it saved her from a worse fate. So it has sometimes been in the voyage of life. A sickness, or the loss of property, or some other experience which people call a misfortune, has been the means of saving the sufferer from spiritual disaster.

It is good for me that I have been afflicted: that I might learn thy statutes (Ps. 119 : 71).

CLARA BARTON TELLS OF HER LIFE-SAVING WORK AMONG THE STARVING MULTITUDES.

VICTIMS THANKING GOD FOR AMERICAN RELIEF!

A Letter That Will Gladden All Who Have Aided the Fund—Many Towns Helped and Another Orphanage Founded—Flowers for "the Dead of the Maine"—The Fund Now Over $70,000—Dr. Klopsch Sails for Cuba to Inspect the Relief Work.

WHEN this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches the hands of our readers, Dr. Klopsch will be in Cuba, whither he goes on a tour of inspection of the famine relief work. He is accompanied by Mrs. Klopsch, who, as many will remember, went with him on the memorable journey to Russia in 1892, when sixteen provinces of that country were swept by famine and cholera. Now, as on the former occasion, he goes in the interest of the readers of this journal, who have so nobly and generously given to save the lives of the starving Cuban peasants. He will, in all probability, proceed from Havana to the various centres of greatest suffering, the journey being undertaken at his own expense.

If anything were needed to satisfy our friends of the Heaven-directed character of the work they have so well begun in Cuba, it is to be found in the letter from Clara Barton, that faithful worker who, with her Red Cross band, is now facing danger and disease in the infected Cuban hospitals. No words of commendation can sufficiently express the praise that is due to these consecrated men and women who have gone into the midst of such perils in the prosecution of the Christ like work which the gifts of our readers have made possible. The letter will bring gladness to all who have had a share in this great undertaking. Miss Barton has written in the form of a diary which she purposes forwarding from week to week for the information of all who are interested in our work in Cuba:

RELIEF SUPPLY WAGONS.

HAVANA, CUBA, February 23.

To Dr. Klopsch and the Readers of The Christian Herald:

We had risen early to be ready for a 5 o'clock start for the town of Jaruco, some twenty miles away. It was dark as night when we stepped into the carriage to take us to the ferry and the train—damp and heavy, just the morning for chills. Some members of the Committee joined us at the train, and as daylight and sunrise came the view, in spite of neglect and devastation, was magnificently lovely. The stately groves of royal palms looked benignly down on the less pretentious banana and cocoanut, each doing its best to provide for and keep life in a starving, dying people.

Senor Cook brought us to the town, where we were met and right royally welcomed by its leading people. The mayor took us in his carriage to the church, followed by a crowd of people, men, women and children, that filled the entire square. The priest, beside service, held in repeated sentences the heart-greetings of a stricken people, to God, for what we had put it into the hearts of Americans to do. Every face wondered them, with its tear-gone, starving pain, and deep-sunk eyes, many of them, and when the ministrations of prayer, hymn and sermon ceased from kneeling on the pavement in prayer to the Great Giver, some for their lives were and are gone, to worship might ever hope to be.

From the church we went to the house of the mayor, where a breakfast was served for a party of twelve, with the mayor, the judge, the doctor and other potential men of the town. I now assumed for awhile what we had "come for to do." The condition of want during most of the year would seem to leave no room for doubt, dark, the houses made and ground floor, no furniture, sometimes a broken bench, a few rags of bedding or cooking—poor, wretched forms dragging about; some could walk, some not, but all now had something to eat. Thank God! our food had gotten there in some quantity, if not all their lean bodies might crave, still something; and while they showed their skeleton bodies, and feet swollen to bursting, they blessed the people of the country that had remembered them with food.

The line of march was long and weary, ending with the "hospital." What shall I say of it? If only a sense of decency were consulted one would say nothing, but truth and facts demand a record. We tried to enter, to reach a poor wretched-looking human being, on a bare cot in the further side of a large room, but were driven back by the stench that met us; not alone the smell one might expect in such a place of neglect, but the dead had evidently lain there, unremoved until putrefaction had taken place.

There were, perhaps, four wrecks of men in the various rooms, doubtless left there to die. Like a body of retreating soldiers, driven, but not defeated, we fell back a few rods, made a stand and, calling for volunteers and picked men, determined to storm the works. Jaruco is one of the great points of devastation. It is said that more people have died there than the entire town numbered in times of peace. It is almost a city of reconcentrados. Naturally, the inhabitants who survive have given all they had, many times over, in these terrible months. Everything is scarce and dear, even water has to be bought. This was our first point of attack. Twenty good soldiers, with only dirt and filth as foes, can make some progress. Water by the drayload, lime by the barrels, brooms, brushes and glue for whitewash, hatchets, buckets and other things most needful made up the equipment, or rather armament; and late in the afternoon, when Mr. Elwell, who might well be termed "The Vigilant," returned to look after the work, preparatory to our leaving for home, he found the four poor patients in clean clothes, on clean beds, lying out in the sunshine; the house cleaned, scrubbed, limed and being whitewashed from ceiling to floor. Monday, we ship cots, blankets, sheets, pillow slips—all the articles needed to make up a plain hospital for twenty-five, to be increased to fifty, the food also to go regularly. Those living sick and helpless in the hovels are to be sought out with care and brought to the new hospital, and nurses placed with them. The doctor is already there in Jaruco to attend them and to send frequent reports of conditions and needs. In two weeks' time we may hope to see not only a hospital there that may bear the name, but progress of its patients that may be noted. It is the first of hundreds that should follow throughout the island, and a type of what we shall endeavor to accomplish. It will naturally be asked if we expect the Spanish authorities to permit us to do this. Judging from to-day, we have reason to expect even co-operation. The commandant of the town was one of the men who welcomed us, and, so far as he had the materials desired, offered them for our use. This was all well, for there were some we could get in no other way.

The crowd that followed us was bewildering, the little children in pitiful proportions. All under six or seven years of age were sent into the church, to come out at a side door, with Mr. Elwell and myself on each side as doorkeepers. Every pale, passing hand took its gift, and the gladness that beamed in their little, wan faces was good for angels' eyes.

There was one more feature to mark the memorable day. After leaving the hospital, we were told that a deputation of ladies desired to call on us. We were in the house of a naturalized American citizen, and prepared to see them. They entered slowly and reverently, the leader bearing a plate of choice flowers. As she handed them to me, I perceived a large envelope addressed to me, with a half-inch border in black and a black ribbon, with a tied bow encircling it. The first sentence, with tender, trembling voice, told the purport of it all:

"For the Dead of the Maine."

The crowd, full of hope and blessing, followed us to the train, and as we passed on, gentle, tender-eyed women came down the road banks from their cottages with little baskets of flowers, to be passed into the carriage, and over the black bordered tribute:

"For the Dead of the Maine."

It was long after dark when we reached home, weary enough, but glad of our day's work—a type of many more to follow.

No more touching story of sympathy with suffering has ever appeared than that which is told in the letter written by Miss Barton from Havana on the morning following the terrible disaster to the Maine. She wrote:

DEAR MR. KLOPSCH—I write to confirm the dispatch just sent, "Thanks, am with the wounded." I want to say more than mere "thanks"—your thoughtful generosity demands it.

Life has some days hard to live through. This is one of them. It is one week to-day since we landed in Havana. We have done a week's work. A COLLEGE MAN ON TRAMP.

How a Princeton Professor Seeking Work as an Unskilled Laborer Passed a Homeless Night in a Chicago Storm and the Company he Met.

THE deeply interesting narrative of Mr. Walter A. Wyckoff's experiences as an unskilled laborer, to which we called attention in these columns last year, is resumed in the March issue of Scribner's Magazine. As our readers may remember, Mr. Wyckoff, who is a graduate of Princeton University, set out in the summer of 1891, to find out by actual experience, what kind of a life a man must live who, without knowledge of any special trade, has to earn his livelihood with his own hands. Starting from the Atlantic Coast, he worked his way westward, earning his living sometimes as porter in a hotel, sometimes as a farm-hand, or as a lumberman in a logging camp. No one appeared to suspect that he was other than he appeared, a study American laborer, willing to work hard to get a modest wage. It was not an easy task. Occasionally he found it difficult to get employment, and when he did get it, the conditions were often painful to a man of education and refinement; but he was determined to find out by actual experience what such a man had to bear, and the kind of difficulties he must encounter.

On December 5, 1891, he found himself on the streets of Chicago without a cent in his pocket. He hoped soon to get employment on some of the buildings then being erected, and joined the great army of the unemployed who had been attracted to the city by the prospect of work on the World's Fair buildings. It was a painful, weary effort that he made in the great city. As we read his history of what he endured during his first day and night—cold, hungry, homeless in a biting storm, our pity goes out to the man who, by hard necessity, has come to undergo such misery, and we can admire the man who voluntarily took upon himself their bitter lot, that he might give articulate voice to the sufferings they have to bear. By the courtesy of Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, we are enabled to publish the following extracts from Mr. Wyckoff's article, and the accompanying picture of the place in which he slept on his first night in Chicago:

"A new phase of my experiment is begun. Hitherto I have been in the open country, and have found work with surprising readiness. Now I am in the heart of a congested labor market, and I am learning by experience, what it is to look for work and fail to find it, to renew the search under the fear of hunger and cold, and of the animal instinct of self-preservation until any employment, no matter how low the work, that would yield food and shelter, appears to you the very kingdom of heaven: and if it could suffer violence, it would seem as though the strength of your desire must take that kingdom by force.

"But it remains impregnable to your attack, and, baffled and weakened, you are thrust back upon yourself and held down remorselessly to the cold, naked fact that you, who in the universe are of supreme importance to yourself, are yet of no importance to the universe. You are a superfluous human being.

"For two hours or more I go from one contractor to another, among the new buildings, seeking work. The interviews are short and decisive. The typical boss is he who is moving, anxious-eyed among his men with attention fixed upon some detail. He hears without heeding my request, and he shouts an answer before he turns to me with an imperative "No, I don't want you!" and sometimes an added curse.

"'I guess you are the fiftieth man that has asked me for a job to-day,' said one boss, more communicative than the others. 'I'm sorry for you poor devils,' he added, with a searching look into my face, 'but there's too many of you.'

"The pavements are now in possession of crowds returning from the theatres, and at certain crossings is a rush for cable-cars going south. We [Mr. Wyckoff had made the acquaintance of a man named Clark, who was also looking for work] turn down Quincy Street. It is still almost an hour before midnight. Simultaneously we notice a deep, wide entry of a business house, so deep that its inner corners are quite dry, and one of them is fairly shielded from the wind. With a mutual impulse we turn in, and crouch together on the paved floor in the shade of the sheltered corner.

We sit in perfect silence for a time. Our teeth have begun again to chatter, and it is difficult to speak. Besides, we have nothing to say beyond the wish that we were fed and warmed and sheltered, and this is such a deep longing to us both that we have begun to keep a reverent silence about it.

Soon I fall into the dreamless torpor which comes to relieve the too-heavy hearted. But from out its stupor I waken sharply to quickest sensibility. Quivering darts of pain are shooting swiftly through my body from a burning centre in my thigh. A night-watchman stands over me, holding a dark lantern to my face. He has roused me with a brutal kick. In my heart black murder reigns alone for a moment, and then I remember what I am, and limp into the street speechless under the watchman's curses.

[The two men then resolved to seek the shelter of a police station where homeless men were permitted to sleep on the stone floor].

HOMELESS TRAMPS SLEEPING ON THE FLOOR OF A CHICAGO POLICE STATION.

By a short flight of steps we finally enter a small passage which opens into a large, square room. A few police officers and reporters are standing about in casual conversation. One officer, with unerring judgment of our need, beckons us his way, and, without a word, he points us down the steps into the basement. A locked door of iron grating blocks the way at the foot of the steps. The officer on duty unlocks the door behind which we stand, and admits us before the desk. The registrar looks up, an expression of irritation in his face.

"More men to spend the night?" he asks.

"Well, turn in," he adds, with a jerk of his head to the left. "I've got no more room for names. I guess I've entered two hundred lodgers and more already to-night."

Clark and I need no further directions. Overflowing through the open door of the farthest passage upon the floor of the main corridor are the sprawling figures of men asleep. We walk in among them.

The wisdom of a late hour of retiring is at once apparent when we have sight of the inner passage. Not a square foot of the dark, concrete floor is visible. The space is packed with men all lying on their right sides with their legs drawn up, and each man's legs pressed close in behind those of the man in front.

Clark draws from an inside pocket a roll of old newspapers, and hands me one. We spread them on the pavement as a Mohammedan unrolls his mat for prayers, and then we take off our boots and coats.

Our soaked, pulpy boots we fold in our jackets and use them as pillows, and we soften our bed by spreading over the newspapers our outer coats, which thus have a chance to dry in the warmth of the room and in that which comes from our bodies.

And in the men themselves, how widely severed from all things human is the prevailing type! Their bloated, unwashed flesh and unkempt hair; their hideous ugliness of face, unreclaimed by marks of inner strength and force, but revealing rather, in the relaxation of sleep, a deepening of the lines of weakness, until you read in plainest characters the paralysis of the will. And then there are the stealthy, restless eyes of those who are awake—eyes set in faces which lack utterly the strength of honest labor.

But there are marked exceptions to the prevailing type, men like Clark, sound and strong in flesh, and having about them the signs of habitual decency, and their faces stamped with the open frankness which comes of earning a living by honest work. Some of these are young immigrants, newly come, most evidently, and I picture their rude awakenings from golden dreams of a land of plenty.

Clark is fast asleep beside me, but I cannot sleep for gnawing hunger and the dull pain of lying bruised and sore upon the hard floor.

The former quiet soon returns, and in it I lie thinking of another world I know, a world of men and women, whose plane of life is removed from this by all the distance of the infinite. Faith and love and high resolve are there, the inspirers of true living, and courage spurs to unflinching effort, and hope lights the way of unsuccess and gives vision through the vale of sorrow and of death. And the common intercourse is the perfect freedom which is bred of high allegiance to inborn courtesy and honor.

What living link is there that joins these worlds together, and gives vital meaning to the confirmation of brotherhood spoken in the divine words of the Apostle: "We, being many, are one body in Christ, and everyone members one of another?"

Pondering this mystery I fall asleep, and so ends my first day in the army of the unemployed.

The Klondike Band in Ohio.

Letters from the Klondike Gospel Band, now on its way to Alaska, are full of interesting incidents of the progress of the evangelists in their western tour. Large meetings have been held at Columbus, London, Xenia, Cedarville, Loveland, Zanesville, Hamilton, and elsewhere. At many of the services, numbers of men and women accepted the invitation to come forward, and many have openly come out for Christ. Captain de Soto and the members of the Band have been cordially welcomed by the pastors of the different churches. At one of the stopping places a wealthy Christian physician decided to abandon his practice, leave his beautiful home and accompany the Band as a humble worker.

ORPHANS IN INDIA.

The Problem of the Children Rescued in the Famine Testing the Faith of the Missionaries.

IT is very touching to read the appeals which come from the missionaries in all parts of the famine districts of India on behalf of the orphans whom they took into their houses during the prevalence of the famine. Fully five thousand of these helpless children are now in the various mission stations and need to be supported, some for three, some for four, and others for five years. Many of the missionaries are going forward with the work, in the exercise of faith like that of George Muller, in England. Such men, making no appeal to the public, but trusting in God for the funds must not be forgotten. The impulse to send them money may come directly from God, and in this way he may be answering prayers addressed to him. The Christian whose ear is open to the still small voice, will not disregard such an impulse, but will accept it as the behest of God and will give according to his means, in order that these homeless children may be fed and clothed and taught. In a few years those children will go forth into the towns and villages of India bearing the message of the Cross which they will tell with grateful tongues.

Some of the children, owing to the custom of early marriages, have a double claim on the kindness of the Christian public in the fact that they are widows as well as orphans. This is no fiction, but sad reality for them. Widowhood means in India misery beyond the bereavement it means in Christian lands. Dr. James Dennis, in his work recently published by the Fleming H. Revell Company, thus describes the lot of the widow in India:

"The condition of the Hindu widow is, almost without exception, a lamentable one. The chief features which make her fate a hard one, especially if she is widowed in childhood, are that she is immediately obliged to shave her head, is forcibly deprived of her jewels and ordinary clothing, and made to wear for the rest of her life a distinctive garb, which is a badge of humiliation. She is allowed to eat only once in twenty-four hours, and every two weeks is required to observe a strict fast, omitting even the one meal. It has been decreed however, by the highest religious court of Hinduism, that if, acting on medical advice, the widow on these fast days should drink a little water it may be condoned. Her person is forever held in contempt, and even her touch may be considered pollution. Her widowhood is regarded as an affliction brought upon her in punishment for heinous sin in a previous state of existence. If it comes upon her in childhood, she must grow to years of maturity with the painful consciousness of her isolation and unhappy ostracism shadowing the early years of her life. She is forever an object of suspicion, and is looked upon as capable of all evil. She is the victim of special temptations, and is often driven to a life of shame through sheer self-loathing and despair.

According to the census of 1881, there were in India at that time 20,938,636 widows. The census of 1891 reports 22,657,429, but as this report was given with reference only to 262,300,000 out of a total population of 287,223,431, if the same proportion holds, the total number in all India would not be less than 25,000,000.

Nearly every fifth woman in India is a widow. This large percentage may be traced directly to the customs of early marriages, and the stringent prohibition of remarriage." For such as these the missionaries plead, so that by learning of Christ they may be emancipated to preach him to their people.

The Story of a Brave Girl's Effort to Win Souls for Christ

By CAROLINE A. CREEVEY.

"I WAS sure you had not given me one solitary thought. You seemed perfectly oblivious of me. I even fancied you wished to avoid me."

"You were prejudiced against me at first. I had to let you judge of my work by its results. But am I not right? Have I not made a convert of you, too?"

"You certainly have. I would like to have a hand in the work which is so real and blessed to you. You have wrought little short of a miracle among these rough men. If I had not seen it, I should not have believed it."

Mr. Hardie waited a moment, then continued, "Behind the work I have been watching you yourself. I first admired you: then I believed in you, and now, I am going to say it—I love you."

As Miss Marion seemed hardly to have heard, he said,

"My dear, you are tired. Won't you come to me, to my arms, and rest? I am strong. I will give you some of that strength which comes from love."

Miss Marion drew herself a little away, and sat up very erectly. She looked at Philip. "I don't quite understand," she said. "No one ever talked to me like that before. I am not that sort of a girl."

"You are the sort of a girl to love, dear, with all a fellow's heart. Can't you understand that?"

"Is this an offer of marriage then?" "It is, Miss Marion."

"Love! and marriage!" she said. "What have I to do with love? My work is my love. Did you think I could give that up?"

"I don't ask you to give it up. I do ask you to take me as your partner in the concern."

"Men do not offer love and marriage to unknown girls whom they chance to meet in a wilderness."

"I do not care who you are, Miss Marion, other than as I have seen you. What is your first name, dear? I want to think of you and call you by it."

"Marion. It is my first, last, and only name. I will tell you why I have no other, and you will then take back what you have said. My father dishonored his name, and I dropped it. When my mother died, killed in reality, by his unkindness, I told my father that I would be his daughter no longer. We had an awful interview. He would have liked to kill me. I dared him to do it. But I meant what I said. I have never borne his name since."

"Poor child. I love you the more if you have seen trouble."

"Ah, trouble!" She caught her breath. "My brother died a drunkard. My father put the drink to his lips. He led him on, into saloons and worse places. My mother's heart was breaking, but that made no difference."

"Marion, why distress yourself?"

"Mother was an angel, so sweet and good. She did not hate my father, and cried out against him although I begged her to do so. But after her death, nothing could have made me stay with him. I despised him, and besides he was cruel and contemptible even to me."

"My dear girl, he contented. Let the past go, and forget with me."

"Listen. I want you to know to what sort of a girl you are proposing marriage. My father met with an accident, and was laid upon his death-bed. I heard of it, and went to him, and did my duty. I hated him none the less, but I let him want for no physical comfort. I nursed him to the end as well as I could. I think he would have liked to ask my forgiveness, but I gave him no chance. I was hard and cold, and my face was cold, too. One day, in a fit of cursing, he burst a blood-vessel, and died. After it was all over, I realized that I had sinned in hating and despising the author of my being. I tried to be penitent, but could not. 'I can at least do penance,' I said to myself. I prescribed my own penance. I said: 'Since my father and brother were men, if I have erred on their account, I will atone by striving to save men. Henceforth, there shall be no man so wicked and degraded that I will not try to save him. Since then I have had great success among men, in other forlorn places, like this. Even such as you say I have success. Let me alone then, my friend, in this work, to which I am surely called. Choose a wife from among the many girls, who bear their fathers' honorable names, one who will be proud to stand beside you."

"Philip Hardie Knelt Beside the Poor Bed."

"But, Marion, what you have said does not alter my purpose to win you for my wife. It does not change my love. Dear, we will work together. I shall catch some of your self sacrificing spirit. I will also take care of you, and keep you well and strong."

"I think he means it," the girl said, her eyes kindling. "It is a new experience. I have never thought of love and marriage. I love all men, but in such a different manner. Can you not see, my friend, that I am not made for marriage? I am like a nun, I fancy. My heart is not susceptible. So, while I thank you with all my heart for your great kindness, let me go on with my work, and you will find it easy to forget me."

"Not so fast, Marion. I will give you time. I don't expect you to love me at once. All I ask, now, is permission to love you."

"How about my name? Sometime you will want to know what it is."

"Never." He smiled. "The sex to which I belong is not credited with the vice of curiosity. It is the case of Lohengrin reversed, and I am not like Elsa."

"It is like a dream. Listen. See how I trust you." She took his hand in both of hers. "I will answer you neither yes nor no. Give me six months in which to go my way alone and do my work. I will treat you fairly. If then I do not love you, I will tell you, and that will end all between us. If I do—I am not like other girls—I will tell you that, plainly, truly, gladly—will that content you, friend?"

"It is more than I hoped to gain. But you will write to me?"

"Yes, and send you always my address. But I shall write no love-letters, for I shall need all my strength for my work."

And with this, Philip Hardie had to be content. They walked slowly together to the boarding-house, and Miss Marion's step was unconsciously lighter than for many days, and her face was happier. She had the knowledge, so sweet, when first it comes to a woman, that one cared for her, although she assured herself that her own nature gave no response.

Miss Marion's departure was a great event for Oakland. Work was wholly suspended, and the men turned out in a body. They carried her to the station in an improvised chair, made of boughs. All shook her hand in their big fists, after which three cheers were given for a good-by. She stood, smiling, saying a word to each. Mr. Hardie was but one among the others, yet her eye lingered on his face an instant, and her hand sought his last of all, as she stepped into the southward-bound train. She had told him of her plan, to rest in the nearest city, in consultation with a dressmaker. She said she always went to a new place arrayed in freshly-made clothes, because the men liked a well-dressed woman from the first. A few weeks of the work made her look shabby; the brown dress must go to the cleaner's, and a new one must be made. She denied Mr. Hardie's request to go part of the journey with her. "Stay here and look after my men," she said. "You are to let me alone for six months."

As the scene shifts now from Oakland, that place may be dropped from this story, with the remark that Miss Marion's work proved genuine. The men continued orderly, sober, industrious. A class for Bible-study was conducted Sunday afternoons, by Mr. Hardie. The reading-room prospered. As superintendent, Mr. Hardie reported to the company that Oakland was a model camp.

Six months passed, and the breath of spring was in the air. Mr. Hardie's feeling for Miss Marion had undergone no change, unless, indeed, absence had made her dearer to him. It was with difficulty he could bide his time. He was impatient for the day to come, when, released from his promise, he might hurry to her and claim her for his own. Her letters had been mainly about "the work," which Miss Marion still carried on with zeal and success in different places. But as Mr. Hardie looked hungrily between the lines he thought he could read signs of awakening love. Little bursts of confidence and pretty messages gave him hope.

Under Nobody's Auspices

(Concluded.)

There came a day and a letter which Philip Hardie never forgot. The letter told of a railroad accident, which had given Miss Marion no other injury than a nervous shock. Nevertheless, she begged him to come to her without delay. "I must see you," she wrote.

Mr. Hardie started at once. He was feverishly impatient. Three days and nights of weary, sleepless traveling westward nearly made him ill, and at the last there were twenty-five miles of stage-coaching before he was set down in the midst of desolate, God-forsaken mining-town in Wyoming. It was like Marion to choose such a place, Philip thought, but hereafter he would use his influence to keep her within the circle of civilization.

The two-roomed shanty in which she was staying was found. A woman, half Indian, half Mexican, was caring for the lad who seemed "poorly," she said to Mr. Hardie. From the woman he also learned that she had been hurt on her way hither, and had lain in bed ever since.

As Philip entered into his dear love's presence, she reached out two hands in joyful welcome. "Now I know that you still love me, and I am so glad," she said.

"And you, dearest?" he asked.

"I love you, too," she answered. "How could help it, since you are the dearest, best man in the world? And you have come all this dreadful journey. Isn't this a awful wilderness? So much worse than even our dear Oakland, which, I dare say, under your good training, has become a model town. I cannot do my work here. He wills it so."

This she said with simple cheerfulness, as if it were an every-day, ordinary disappointment. Philip Hardie knelt beside the poor bed and kissed her. They talked their love for each other. He saw that she looked ill, but by no means hopelessly so. There was fresh color in her cheeks, and a bright light in her eyes. He said he would nurse her, and make her strong, and take her away with him.

She shook her head and placed her hand over her heart. "I ought to have told you," she said. "For years I have had trouble here. My mother died of heart-failure, brought on by my father's unkindness, as I told you, but I have inherited something of the kind. It is well, my meetings always tire me so. But resting a few minutes after the men go out I am generally able to quiet the irregular beatings that make me feel so weak. The accident on the railroad upset me greatly. Dear, I saw a man cut to pieces by the cruel wheels, and the shock was too much for my nervous system. I was, myself, not hurt at all, and I know it is silly to mind it so much. But I think I have been badly shaken, and—well—I must be with you but a short time. But, since I have been able too see you, and tell you that I love you, dear, patient Philip, I am quite willing to go. You have kissed me. It was our wedding kiss, was it not?"

For answer, Philip kissed her again. She took his hand, and laid it gently over her heart. He was shocked to find its beatings irregular, one minute weak and wavering, the next, quick, hard and strong. She watched his face, and saw that he understood.

"If only I could bring a physician here," he groaned.

"It could do no good," she said. "The heart-trouble knows no cure. Our Father knows minds the heart. He keeps it going, and He lets it stop. It brings Him very near to us. Dear, I won't conceal from you that I would like to have lived and been your wife. But some time you will see, as I do now, that this way, this way, is best. After all, how could I be the wife you want? I am a nameless, homeless girl, quite an anomaly, among friends, and your family would not know what to do with me. But you will never forget me and our chance meeting? You will always give me a tender thought, and so will she, that other, who will take your place, and to whom you will tell my story. I am not one bit jealous of her. I only want her to be worthy of you. She cannot love you better than I do, dear, but she will make you a more suitable wife."

In such fashion they talked, till night came on, and Miss Marion seemed weary. The Indian woman spread her blanket beside the invalid's bed upon the floor, and Mr. Hardie sat in a chair just outside her door, in the kitchen. He could not lie down and sleep, although sorely fatigued. He must be ready to meet the slightest call of his dear girl, now too surely slipping away from him. Several times in the night he stepped to her bedside and looked at her. The moon shone brightly through the small window. A bright fire burned in the kitchen stove, which furnished a gentle warmth for Marion's room. The invalid slept peacefully, painlessly, a smile playing around her mouth. The woman on the floor slept soundly, and breathed hard. It was such a wretched place! Towards morning, because he was thoroughly exhausted, Philip fell asleep. When he awoke, with a start, it was broad daylight. The woman had set some dishes on the table and had stepped outside. The tea-kettle was singing. The air was filled with the smell of fried bacon and coffee. Mr. Hardie roused himself and slipped noiselessly into Marion's room. If she were sleeping, she must not be disturbed. Ah, sleeping! The face was smiling. A glow flushed the cheeks. But he knew. He placed his hand over her poor heart. It was quite still.

And Philip Hardie knelt beside his love, and hot tears flowed from his eyes. He remembered that it was the Sabbath dawn. What more fitting time for his dear one to lay her jewels at the feet of her beloved Master?

THE END.

THE ARK PUZZLE.

We are still receiving many replies to the scriptural puzzle:

"A casement held a wondrous view,—
And all the living world looked through."

Propounded by M. V. L., Elizabeth, N. J. The answer, as our readers continue to be abundantly informed, is "Noah's Ark." Many of these answers are so interestingly worded that we would like to publish them in full, but space forbids that, and even a complete report of the names signed to correct answers, which continue to come in.

THE 30,000 PROMISES OF THE BIBLE.

THIRTY thousand! God's promises told,
Like pictures of silver and apples of gold;
Not for the pure, the sinless and free,
But only for sinners like you and me—
You who are thinking for fountains above,
You who are longing for light and love.

Thirty thousand! an army strong
Of varying force for a conflict long—
Shields in the battle of faith well tried,
A shining phalanx, and side by side.
Were there only ten—yet they must have stood
Because they came from the mouth of God.

Thirty thousand! they thickly shine;
How they strew with gems the path divine.
How they gleam as coin of heavenly state
That current will pass at the pearly gate!

To the exiled here in the realms of sin
They tell of an endless life within.
Of boundless bliss where they weep no more,
An ocean where lieth a golden shore.

Thirty thousand! like banners of light
Hanging above us as stars of night.
Thirty thousand blessings from God!
The great and the good, the glorious God!
Thirty thousand! they stand forever—
Will they fail or deceive us? Never! Never!

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Love Affairs—Maidenly Reserve—Secret Prayer—Indolent Sons.

THE POSTMAN has been very busy this week bringing letters from all parts of the country to be answered and talked over by Friends in Council. Some of the questions are very difficult to answer, especially those relating to the love affairs of our young friends. An Oklahoma correspondent wishes to know whether two persons of apparent similarity, both having a dark complexion, one with gray eyes and black hair, the other with brown eyes and brown hair, represent the opposite poles of magnetism, one positive and the other negative. Undoubtedly they may, and the probability is that the one with the gray eyes and black hair will represent the positive, and the other the negative points of attraction.

K. F. A. is quite right in her feeling that a girl should not listen to a story told by any one which is not fit to be told in the presence of her mother and of the entire family. We cannot too strongly insist on the right and duty of young girls to hold themselves far above anything in the least indelicate. Certainly, no man is worth a girl's friendship who insists on using in her presence words of double meaning, or who tells her stories which bring a blush to anyone's cheek. Equally, a girl should frown upon profanity and upon jesting about sacred things. It is quite possible for a young woman to create about herself an atmosphere into which nothing unworthy will dare intrude. She can simply refuse to smile when any one, man or woman speaks lightly and jestingly of sacred things. Her manner, quite as well as her words, can show that she will not have that which is dearest and most hallowed called in question in her presence. With regard to the amusements of which this correspondent speaks, no arbitrary rule can be given. One must follow the dictates of one's conscience; but a good test of the whole question of amusements is to bring it to this Bible verse: "Whether ye eat or drink or whatever ye may do, do all to the glory of God." If you feel that the amusement you crave will not bear this test, you would better let it alone.

Another friend has two or three very serious questions to ask. One is with regard to her secret prayer. She is very apt to be interrupted when she tries to obtain a season of quiet meditation and communion with God. Most house-keepers will sympathize with her in this. One of my friends, who had a large family, resolved some years ago that she would have half an hour daily in her own room, which she could devote to reading the Bible and praying; but do what she would, the children would come to the door and disturb her at the most unexpected moments. She would open her door and say vehemently: "John, or Mary, or Kittie, if you disturb me again while I am praying, I will come out and whip you." It seems to me that this was praying under difficulties and that this lady might have taken a hint from the beautiful old story told of Francesca. This would-be saint had a husband who did not sympathize with her in her religious life. One morning she was interrupted five times in her devotions; but each time went back with an mollified tone and perfect serenity of spirit to continue their fervent prayer that she was worshipping God just as much in performing the little duties of life, as in praying to him. Is not a mother's labor of love pleasing to God? Can we not, as we care for our little children, do it according to the pattern set by the Master, even if we are not able to give very much time to direct prayer? A little mother's prayer can wing its way to the throne of God, when the mother is too busy to have a season to herself.

One correspondent has another very serious problem. Her grown-up son, lovely and amiable and kind to everyone in the house, has drifted into indolent habits: and as he cannot get the work to do which he prefers, is doing nothing at all, but allowing his mother to support him. She wonders whether she is doing right in encouraging him in this sort of dependence. To this there can be but one reply. She is doing very wrong. A man of twenty five, in full health, with two hands, two feet, and a brain of the average intelligence, should take hold of the first work he can get. If he cannot get the job he wants, let him take something else. Several years ago I met a very prosperous man who had built up a large fortune by industry and ability. He told me that when he was twenty years old, he was suddenly thrown upon his own resources, losing the place he had had through no fault of his. Being an educated man, he had first sought for work in some channel which was in the line of his studies; but none opened. He then went out one morning, determined to find work before night. He went from store to store and from factory to factory, everywhere meeting the same answer, "We are dropping men instead of taking them on." Finally, one man looked at him and said, "You seem pretty strong. Are you willing to go down into the yard and help my porter load goods?" "Certainly," was the reply. The man took off his coat and went to work with a will, and though it reads like a fairy story, it is perfectly true that in five years' time he had reached the highest clerkship in the place, and when I met him after many years, he was the senior partner in the concern.

WEAK LUNGS.

A book by Dr Robert Hunter of New York, gives all the latest discoveries of medical science regarding Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis and Pulmonary Catarrh, explains their differences and points out the curative treatment of each form of lung disease.

Dr. Hunter is one of the oldest and most experienced lung specialists of the world, having devoted his professional life since 1851, to the Special Study and Treatment of Lung Complaints. He was the first to discover Consumption to be a local disease of the lungs, and to show that it destroys life solely by strangling the breathing power of that organ.

He was the father of the local treatment of the lungs by medicated inhalation, the inventor of the [illegible] and the discoverer of the only known germicide which has power to kill the germs of consumption in the lungs, the patient.

His antiseptic inhalation is the only scientific treatment of lung diseases. It applies the remedies to the very seat of the disease in the only direct and common sense way. Its success is attested by thousands whom it has saved and restored to health from these dread maladies.

A copy of Dr. Hunter's book will be sent free to all subscribers of The Christian Herald who are interested by addressing him at 117 West 45th Street, New York.

A PECULIAR FACT.

Thousands of People Have Dyspepsia in its Worst Form and Do Not Know It.

A weak stomach is the cause of about nine-tenths of all disease, yet in most cases the wrong thing is treated and the true cause overlooked.

This is because a weak digestion produces symptoms resembling nearly every disease because it weakens and disturbs the action of every nerve and organ in the body; poor digestion causes heart trouble, kidney troubles, lung weakness, and especially nervous breakdown or nervous prostration, the nerves cannot stand the wear and tear unless generously fed by well-digested, wholesome food.

Keep the digestion good, and no one need fear the approach of disease.

Mrs. H. M. Lee, of Rochester, N. Y., writes: "For the sake of suffering humanity I want to say that from a child I had a very weak stomach, threw up my food very often after eating, and after a few years nervous dyspepsia resulted, and for more than twenty years I have suffered inexpressibly.

"I tried many physicians and advertised remedies with only temporary relief for nervous dyspepsia, and not until I commenced taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets last September, six months ago, have I been free from suffering caused by the condition of my nerves and stomach; in short, chronic nervous dyspepsia.

"I have recommended Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets to many of my friends, and now I want, in a public way, to say they are the safest, pleasantest and, I believe, surest cure for stomach and nerve troubles. I write my honest opinion, and I will gladly answer any letter of inquiry at any time and feel that I am, in my small way, helping on a good cause."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is not a patent medicine, but they contain only the fruit salts, digestive acids and peptones necessary to help the weak stomach to promptly and thoroughly digest food.

All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50 cents for full-sized package, and any one suffering from nervous dyspepsia, sour stomach, headaches, acidity, gases, belching, etc., will find them not only a quick relief, but a radical cure.

Send to Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich., for little book describing cause and cure of stomach troubles, giving symptoms and treatment of the various forms of indigestion.

When Hamlet Exclaimed "Aye, there's the rub!" could he have referred to SAPOLIO

A TOMB OF KINGS.

RECENT investigators claim to have discovered evidences of the handiwork of the persecuted children of Israel in the pyramids of Egypt. The pyramid in our illustration is one of the eleven at Sakkara. Some of the bricks of which it is composed were made without straw. We remember in the Biblical history that:

Pharaoh commanded the same day the taskmasters of the people and their officers saying: Ye shall no more give the people straw to make bricks as heretofore; let them go and gather straw for themselves. And the tale of the bricks which they did make heretofore, ye shall lay upon them; ye shall not diminish ought thereof; for they be idle; therefore they cry, saying, Let us go and sacrifice to our God. . . . And the people were scattered abroad throughout all the land of Egypt to gather stubble instead of straw. And the taskmasters hasted them and beat them and they appealed to Pharaoh and he said: Ye are idle, ye are idle; therefore ye say, Let us go and do sacrifice to the Lord.

THE PYRAMID AT SAKKARA, EGYPT.

Then came Moses' protest, the plagues and the Red Sea. There are seventy pyramids in Egypt, all built to entomb ancient kings, a goodly number of whom stand to-day in a row in the British Museum, neatly labelled and numbered as "antiquities." The power of Egypt has long since faded into nothingness, its religion has passed into a myth, and its wonderful palaces of the dead stand emptied of regal tenants before whom once the whole world trembled, while the Israel they persecuted covers the face of the earth, since the Hebrew is found as a citizen of every nation. According to the doctrine of Isis, a body must "rest in peace" a certain great length of time in order to secure immortality, and the rich and mighty and intellectual Pharaoh's spared neither riches nor labor, nor handcraft of artist, nor toil of masonry, nor driving their helpless captives in cruel tasks, to prepare for their dead bodies such security of repose, such privacy of post-mortem dwelling, as would provide for their regal slumbers a protection long as the world endured, as sacred from intrusion as were the inner courts of their palaces when guarded by Egyptian legions.

THE CHRISTIAN ABSTAINER

The Widespread Evils of all Intemperance. Prov. 23:20–35.

It is well that occasionally the attention of Christian young people should be called to a subject on which it might be supposed they do not need instruction. So elementary a duty as that of sobriety is expected of them as a matter of course. But it is not safe to ignore the subject. In our day the enemy is desolating homes, breaking hearts and carrying brilliant souls to destruction, as he has done in the past, and he seems to take advantage of any laxity in the campaign against him, to put forth new energy in his merciless fight. It is the duty of every Christian to be a total abstainer, not only for his own safety from the approach of the insidious foe, but in order that by example he may encourage others to abstain. But this duty may not be perceived if it is not urged persistently and emphatically. There is the more need for it because of the dangerous doctrine which is being promulgated in some of our churches. We are being told that we should resist any restriction that may be imposed on our Christian liberty. It is said that we have the right to use the things of the world without abusing them, and that we do ourselves a wrong when we voluntarily pledge ourselves to abstain from the use of intoxicants. This preaching of moderation and the exercise of Christian linerty may do a mischief which will cause sorrow to those who are engaged in it. Theoretically the advice is sound. The Christian has the right to drink wine and to let "his moderation be known unto all men," but it is one of the rights which the higher law of brotherhood requires him to renounce. True, if he has the spirit of Christ and is living in union with him, he is in no danger of falling under the power of the drink fiend, but there are around him people who have not that spirit and who are in danger. Such people would be deterred from the abstinence, which is their only safe course, if only those abstained who are, in danger. Abstinence then would be a confession of weakness, a stigma, of which they would be ashamed. But when strong men, men of undoubted moral courage and self-control, abstain, the weak brother is in good company and can refuse the proffered wine cup without humiliation. We may be quite sure that in thus giving up the liberty Christ grants us, we shall have his approval. He who "gave his life for the sheep," will be pleased to see his followers making a sacrifice for others. It is by no means certain that the use of intoxicants is a benefit to any one, but if their value were indubitably proved, we might well dispense with them, if our doing so encouraged one poor victim to take his stand by our side and fight his enemy in the armor that we wear. This is the law of self-sacrifice which is the glory of Christ.

Get More and You Get Less

Why is it every sarsaparilla which tries to sell itself, ranges itself against Ayer's as the standard? Why is it that all have to offer extra inducements—bigger bottles, fancy wrappers, cheaper price—anything, everything, but the one inducement of quality? Quality tells.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

has never been equaled by any cheap imitation of it.

"I have sold Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla for more than twenty-five years, and have never heard anything but words of praise from my customers. A preparation must possess great merit to maintain such a reputation. I believe your sarsaparilla to be the best blood purifier. I often hear other manufacturers say that this is "as good as Ayer's." They always set Ayer's up as the standard of excellence." — S. F. BOYCE, Duluth, Minn.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Church Experiment.*

"WHAT I am going to propose now," said Rev. Henry Maxwell, the minister, "is something which ought not to appear unusual or at all impossible of execution. Yet I am aware that it will be regarded by a large number, perhaps of the members of the church. But I consider that we may have a thorough understanding of what we are considering, I will put my proposition very plainly, perhaps bluntly. I want volunteers from the First Church who will pledge themselves earnestly and honestly for an entire year not to do anything without first asking the question, 'What would Jesus do?' And after asking that question, each one will follow Jesus as exactly as he knows how, no matter what the results may be. I do not, of course, include myself in this company of volunteers, and shall take for granted that my church here will not be pursued at my future conduct as based upon this standard of action, and will not oppose whatever is done if they think Christ would do it. Have I made my meaning clear? At the close of the service here I want all those members of the church who are willing to join such a company to remain, and we will talk over the details of the plan. Our motto will be, 'What would Jesus do?' Our aim will be to act just as he would if he were in our places, regardless of immediate results. In other words, we propose to follow his steps as closely and as literally as we believe he taught his disciples to do. Let those who volunteer to do this will pledge themselves for an entire year, beginning with to-day, so to act."

Henry Maxwell calmly closed the service with a brief prayer. The organist began his postlude immediately after the benediction, and the people began to go out. After several minutes Henry Maxwell asked all who expected to remain to pass into the lecture room on the side. He himself was detained at the front of the church talking with several persons there, and when he finally looked around, the church was empty. He walked over to the lecture room entrance and went in. He was almost dazed to see the people who were there. He had not made up his mind about any of his members, but he had hardly expected that so many were ready to enter into such a literal testing of their discipleship as now awaited them.

"I want to ask a question," said Rachel Winslow after the pastor had prayed and further explained his proposition. "I'm a little in doubt as to the source of our knowledge concerning what Jesus would do. Who is to decide for me just what he would do in my case? It is a different age. There are many perplexing questions in our civilization that are not mentioned in the teaching of Jesus? How can I tell what he would do?"

"There is no way that I know of," replied Mr. Maxwell, "except as we study them through the medium of the Holy Spirit. You remember what Christ said concerning to his disciples about the Holy Spirit: 'Howbeit, when He, the Spirit of Truth is come, He shall guide you into all the truth.' There is no other test that I know of. We shall all have to decide what Jesus would do after going to that source of knowledge."

* In His Steps: "What Would Jesus Do?" By Charles M. Sheldon. A story of new life in a modern city church, telling the results of a pledge by pastor and people to live for a year according to a strict rule of conduct. Pp. 282. Price in paper covers 25 cents; in cloth, 75 cents. Published by J. H. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York.

Cures While You Sleep

Vapo-Cresolene Whooping Cough, Croup, Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Catarrh.

During recent years an important change has taken place in the treatment of certain diseases of the air passages. While formerly it was the custom to rely almost entirely on internal medications in this treatment, the importance of direct applications of medicines to the diseased parts is becoming more and more generally recognized.

Of this method of treatment, Cresolene is the most largely used, the most successful in its results, and the most convenient way of medicating the air passages.

BEST For The SKIN

California Cream of Lemon is the best toilet preparation in the world because it is absolutely free from chemicals, fatty matter or potash.

It is made entirely from the soluble substance of the whole lemon.

There are other toilet preparations into which the lemon enters, but they are "improved" by the introduction of foreign substances which detract from the natural qualities of the fruit and are more or less injurious to the skin.

Nature does these things better than man.

California Cream of Lemon is a natural skin healer, builder and beautifier.

It is both a preventive and a cure for all skin diseases and blemishes.

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

A prominent physician writes:

Dear Sirs:—Replying to yours on the use of Tartarlithine as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that the verdict is unanimous in its favor. I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity and promptness with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished for years.

Strange Ways in Which God Leads Us. Acts 13: 45-49.

Many of God's servants have had an experience analogous to that of the two Christian missionaries at Antioch. Their future work was changed and the current of their lives turned into a new channel by the attitude taken by their hearers. Probably, up to this time, Paul and Barnabas, like the church of Jerusalem, regarded the Jew as their sphere of labor. The idea of Christianity as a world-wide religion had not entered their minds. To the Jews, familiar with the law and the prophets, the news of him who had fulfilled the Old Testament promises and predictions, was peculiarly appropriate. They of all men might have been expected to welcome such news, to understand and appreciate him. But when the Jews rejected the message, the preachers delivered it to the Gentiles. Thenceforward it was from the Gentiles mainly that Paul's trophies were gathered. It was a strange arrangement of God's providence which turned the zealous Pharisee into a preacher to Gentiles. Luther and the Wesleys had a similar experience. It was the intolerance of the Pope and the Catholic clergy that made Luther a Protestant, in spite of himself. It was only when the church doors were closed against the Wesleys that the preaching in the fields and on the corners of the streets began.

Our own plans may be laid with our best wisdom, and as it often seems to us, with a single eye to the service of God and the advancement of Christ's kingdom; and yet they seem to us to fail. Efforts that we make in all good will and sincerity for the benefit of others are misunderstood and our motives impugned. We enter on some work that seems to us so good that we may surely count on God's help and blessing, but we fail and it seems as if God were not fulfilling his promise. We are puzzled and often discouraged, but it would be very unwise to let our faith falter. God may be opening some wider sphere by closing that which we tried to enter, and may be thwarting us in our purposes in order to guide us into his own larger and better plan. Mr. Beecher's story of his father's tact in managing him supplies a key to much that is mysterious in our Heavenly Father's control of his children. In his boyhood, Beecher was set on being a sailor and was resolved, if he was opposed, to run away. But his father, though horrified at his choice of a career, showed no opposition. He pointed out to him that to achieve distinction in such a career he must study. Beecher understood this and began his studies. Very soon all desire for the sea passed away and he entered on the career for which he was specially adapted. God's providences sometimes follow on those lines leading us by a way that we know not, into the places for which God designs us and endows us.

Help for Cuban Refugees.

Rev. Geo. Brereton, of East Northfield, Mass., writes us that he has been able to collect a very small lot of clothing, bedding and furniture for the Cuban refugees now under the care of Rev. J. de Cova at Tampa, Fla. He found a ready response on the part of Christian people to his appeals. He suggests that as those refugees are in urgent need, other Christian sympathizers might help them by speaking to pastors and Christian workers in their midst.

Free to all Readers.—The New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

As stated in the last issue the new botanical discovery, Anuric, proves a wonderful curative in all diseases caused by uric acid in the blood, or disordered conditions of the Kidneys and Urinary organs. The Anuric Herb is the remarkable cure of Rev. W. C. Dellinger, pastor of the gospel at North Canton, New York, cured of Alburia, when, as he says, he had lost faith in man and medicine and was praying for death. Another testimonial comes from Mrs. Mary Lemmon, a well-known lady living at Hanover, Pa., who writes: "I had Bright's disease of the kidneys and was given up by the doctors. I got a bottle of Anuric from Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and it cured me entirely." Dr. Kilmer & Co. are now located at No. 1 Kilmer Building, Fourth Avenue, New York, and offer to any readers of The Christian Herald who suffer from any form of Kidney or Bladder trouble, Rheumatism, etc., a bottle of Anuric, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, Pain Cure or Cough Cure, absolutely free. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is a specific for all diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Bladder and Urinary Organs. We advise all sufferers to send their name and address to the company, and receive the Anuric free. To prove the wonderful curative powers of it is sent to you entirely free.

OPENS HIS EYES.

Probably no one thing will more profoundly startle a man than to find out by actual proof what coffee drinking is doing for him. When he realizes that day after day the physical machinery is not working right, he naturally casts about for the cause in order to stop it before it goes too far.

But to locate the cause is frequently beyond the power of himself and even his physician. If such cases can be induced to drop coffee and other narcotic drugs like tobacco, etc., for a short period and use Postum Cereal Food Coffee, the truth is brought home in unmistakable terms.

The need of a pure cereal coffee for human-ity was the active cause for the discovery of Postum. Plenty of "Coffee Substitutes" existed but their unpalatable taste prevented their use.

It required over a year of experiment to discover how to select the proper parts of cereals and roast them in such a way as to give the taste of a mild and high grade Java coffee and yet preserve the entire purity and food value.

Postum now has imitators that throw samples about, which claim to be pure "grain," "wheat" or "cereal coffee," but careful test and investigation shows that every article of that sort which has any distinctive coffee flavor, is simply a cheap, low grade adulterated coffee; a counterfeiter cares little what goes into a customer's stomach. The analysis of Postum is furnished the Pure Food Commissioners and Physicians of various states, and it is known to be a solutely pure and highly nutritive.

Ten days use of the genuine Postum, properly boiled 15 minutes after boiling commences, tells surprising tales to partly sick men and women.

RESURRECTION POWER.

The Risen Life and Its Earthly Signs. Col. 3 : 1-17.

Beautiful in its conception is the view of the Christian's inner and outward life, which runs like a thread of gold through Paul's speeches and writings. The Christian, as he sees him, is one so closely identified with Christ that he is in union with him, living his life, having his righteousness, fighting the battles in his strength and inspired with his spirit. He is dead to the world, crucified with Christ. The appeals which move other men to action have no more power on him than they would have on a dead man. The prospect of an enormous fortune which may be had by some deflection from which the world calls trifling, from the path of rectitude, does not dazzle him any more than a table covered with gold and jewels would arouse a corpse. The call of gratification of physical appetites and passions, which is the idea of supreme happiness to some men, leading them to the saloon, the theatre, and the haunts of vice, finds him insensible as a dead man. He is dead to all such allurements. But he is not lifeless. There are matters to which he is very much alive. There are appeals to which he is keenly sensitive, and which stir him to exertion and endurance, such as prove vigorous and energetic life. Such sensitiveness on the one hand, and insensibility on the other, are seen in other matters beside religion. The story is told of two statesmen being brought together for the first time at the house of a common friend. They had often been in contact in public affairs, but until then had never had private and social intercourse. After passing an evening together each was asked what he thought of the other, and each confessed to a great disappointment. One thought the other an ignorant man, because he did not know that the greatest racing stable in the country was at a certain place, and the other was amazed that so prominent a man should not have understood the significance of an ancient manuscript, which had just been discovered. So, the world is apt to consider the Christian dull and stupid; while the Christian laments the sordid, debasing principles of the world. Each is alive on one side of his nature, but dead on the other. The experience of conversion is a reversal of former conditions. The convert becomes dead to that to which he had previously been alive, and becomes alive to that to which he had previously been dead. He is risen with Christ into resurrection life. "It is I, August," said a boon companion of the great Augustine, who met him after his conversion, and was hurt that he did not recognize him. "It is not I," Augustine answered. "The August of the former days is dead, and I am living a new life." This is the key to all the Apostle's system. The new life which Christ imparts to those who come to him changes the nature, so that temptations lose their power.

A Scottish Preacher.

Rev. David Findlay, formerly of St. George's Free Church, Glasgow, Scotland, is now visiting this country, and has supplied several pulpits with much acceptance. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, of Bethany Presbyterian Church, Phila., writes that he has the very highest confidence in his ability to fill any pulpit which may be open to him. Rev. D. Stuart Dodge, pastor of South Presbyterian Church, for whom Mr. Findlay has preached several times, says: "My people speak very highly of his services. I believe he is well qualified to do good work for the Master in any field to which providence may direct him. Dr. George Stanley Burnfield, of Philadelphia, also strongly recommends him. Mr. Findlay would be glad to settle permanently in the United States if the way is opened to him. His address is 466 West 22d St., New York.

Good News for Asthma Sufferers.

We are glad to announce that the Kola Plant recently discovered on the Congo River, West Africa, has proved itself a sure cure for Asthma, as proved at the time. We have the testimony of ministers of the gospel, doctors, business men and others, all speaking of the marvelous curative power of this new discovery. Hon. L. G. Clute, of Greeley, Iowa, writes that he could not lie down at night or day from Asthma, and the Kola Plant cured him at once. Rev. G. Ellsworth Stump, Pastor of the Congregational Church at Newell, Ia., was cured by it of Asthma of twenty years' standing, and many others give similar testimony. To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1164 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of the Christian Herald who suffers from any form of Asthma. In return they only ask that you tell your neighbors of it when cured yourself. This is very fair and we advise all sufferers from Asthma to send for the Case, It costs you nothing.

Burpee's PINK Cupid.

This little wonder grows only six to eight inches high, with dark, emerald-green foliage. The plant spreads from a foot to eighteen inches around, and sends up numerous strong stems, each bearing in full bloom at once from three to four handsome flowers, close to the end.

The standard is a bright rose-pink, while the wings are pure white or light pink, very large and finely formed.

The plant itself is vigorous and hardy, and those who had poor or indifferent success with White Cupid will find Burpee's PINK Cupid easy to grow anywhere. The seed is black, of wonderfully strong germination, and needs no special care in planting.

Though flowering early, it continues in bloom very late, bearing a profusion of large flowers so thickly as to completely hide the plant itself. It has no rival as a bedding and border annual, for its color and fragrance make it a rare novelty. A large bed looks as if the ground were literally strewn with bright-pink rosebuds. No novelty has such beauty and grace combined as has Burpee's PINK Cupid. It is also delightfully fragrant, and will be admired by every one who sees it.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

M. L. B., Salina, Kan. What should a person do who is unable through deafness to hear a sermon, but is very anxious to secure the salvation of his soul?

Study the Bible with such printed aids as he can get and pray earnestly for the help of the Holy Spirit. There are many sermons published which it would be useful to read; but the best help is the Word of God, which, with the Holy Spirit's guidance, will give all the light necessary for salvation.

Earnest Subscriber, Millerstown, Pa. I believe in the Lord Jesus and love him, but at times I feel that my sins are not forgiven. Do I do wrong in continuing to partake of the communion?

No, you do quite right in partaking of the communion. It was instituted for those who believe in the Lord Jesus and love him. Your feeling about your sins not being forgiven is probably due to a morbid, anxious temperament. Your feelings have nothing to do with the fact. God will keep his promise. If you doubt his word and consider your feelings you will continue uncomfortable. Trust his word and do not insult him by doubting whether he will do as he promises.

Sympathy, Cleveland, O. 1. Will the American warships that are to carry food to the Cuban sufferers sail from New York? 2. At what ports in Cuba will they touch?

1. They will probably sail from Key West, the supplies being conveyed to that port from New York by the Ward Line steamships. 2. Probably Matanzas and some point near Sagua la Grande, at both of which places the famine prevails, and no relief can be sent except by sea, owing to the lack of transportation facilities.

Old Subscriber, Fremont, Neb. What is the Apostles' Creed and what is its significance?

It was an early summary of the Christian faith in which all Christian churches agree. It is said to have been composed by the apostles themselves, under divine guidance, during their stay in Jerusalem shortly after our Lord's ascension. Tradition declares that each apostle contributed a sentence of the Creed, and left it as a rule to be handed down to all the ages, but this is improbable.

A. M. H., Marlboro, Mass. Does not the question "Who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?" (John 9: 2), indicate that there is a pre-existence?

The question was asked, as you will see, by the disciples. They may have had some such notion. Christ often had to reprove them for their foolish ideas. He claimed a previous existence, but never said anything to imply that other men had a life before this.

A. A. P., Mountain Lake, Minn. Is a true Christian punished by God or by Satan? I have often heard it stated when sickness or bereavement fell upon a Christian that Satan did it by God's permission. Is it so?

Do not make the mistake that Job's friends made, of assuming that sickness, trouble, or bereavement may necessarily be punishment. You will find a different theory, not in John only, but in Hebrews. The writer of that epistle says (12: 5 11) that chastisement is sometimes to be regarded as a proof of God's love. He evidently regarded it as being inflicted by God, but to be in the nature of discipline and education rather than punishment. On the other hand, Paul said his "thorn in the flesh," was the messenger of Satan (II. Cor. 12: 7). It does not make much difference to the sufferer whether God inflicts, or permits Satan or men to inflict. In either case the affliction must be endured, and if it is borne with patience and equanimity God is pleased, because then the world sees how his children love and honor him.

L. Brenger, Broken Bow, Neb. What is the size, population, and present condition of Galilee?

It is about two thousand square miles in area, or about the same size as Delaware. In the time of Christ it contained, according to Josephus, 204 cities and towns, the smallest of which had a population of 15,000 persons. The best estimates place the present population below 200,000. Its climate is genial and its soil fruitful.

Inquirer, Richmond, Va. On what ground does the English law forbid the marriage of a man with his deceased wife's sister?

On the degree of affinity, which churchmen have based on Lev. 18: 18, which to the lay mind appears merely to forbid a man marrying his wife's sister while his wife is alive. It is contended, also, that a man whose wife is dead, may now ask her sister to come and keep house for him and care for his children; whereas, if marriage between the two were possible, it would not be fitting or proper for her to undertake such duties. There is a strong public feeling in favor of repealing the law, but hitherto the bill providing for its repeal has been rejected, sometimes by the House of Lords and sometimes by the House of Commons.

R. R., Mebane, N. C. Can these words be found in the Bible: "No drunkard shall inherit the Kingdom of Heaven." A drinking man told me there are no such words in the Bible, but I think I have seen them. I can find where it says "Kingdom of God," but he insists on the word "Heaven." He says he will never drink again if I can find the words.

"Kingdom of God" and "Kingdom of Heaven" are synonymous. The passages in Gal. 5: 21 and 1. Cor. 6: 10 are sufficiently explicit.

R. D., Senecaville, O. 1. I notice that your quotation of Job 19: 26 differs from the reading of my Bible. Have you any authority for the change? 2. Why did Christ advise the people (Matthew 24: 20) to pray that their flight might not be in the winter?

1. Yes; the Authorized Version renders the passage, "In my flesh shall I see God." The Revised Version gives it, "From my flesh." But the marginal rendering which was preferred by the American Revisers is "Without my flesh." This is the only rendering which gives the obvious meaning of the writer. He was showing that after death, and the worms had eaten his body, yet even then he would be able to see God with his soul, which would survive the destruction of his physical eyes. 2. In that passage, which differs from the corresponding one in Luke, Christ was referring to the destruction of Jerusalem. He advised his followers to quit Jerusalem when the besiegers appeared, as it was sure to fall. Otherwise they might have remained to help in its defense. In the winter their suffering from exposure would be intense. As a matter of fact the Christians did flee and they were saved from the awful horrors that the besieged endured.

S. L. W., Petersburg, Pa. Where can I learn something of the hard questions and riddles which the Queen of Sheba asked Solomon when she visited him?

Tradition has preserved some of the questions which she is said to have put to Solomon to test his wisdom. These, we believe, are principally found in the Talmudical writings. It is said she introduced a party of children all dressed alike, and asked the king to tell which were boys and which girls. King Solomon ordered vessels to be brought that the children might wash their hands. The girls rolled up their sleeves, but the boys plunged their hands into the water at once, and were easily detected by the king. The queen next ordered her attendants to set before Solomon a number of beautiful bouquets and asked him to indicate which were the real flowers and which the false. Solomon ordered the keeper of his gardens to bring in a hive of bees, and they almost instantly settled upon the natural flowers and began to extract the sweets from them, leaving the artificial flowers untouched. Many other similar traditions illustrative of Solomon's wisdom are told by the ancient writers.

Geo. L., Bishop's Crossing, Quebec, Can. Who was David's mother?

Her name is unknown. Nahash, mentioned in the Scripture, was the name of two persons: (1) An Ammonite king, who lived during Saul's reign, and (2) a person mentioned only once (II. Sam. 17: 25), in stating the parentage of Amasa. There is a rabbinical tradition that Nahash and Jesse, the father of David, were identical. Another theory is that the wife of Jesse, who became David's mother, had formerly been the spouse of Nahash, king of Ammon. Still another explanation is that Nahash was the name of David's mother, but all commentators agree that the matter is too indefinite to be stated as a fixed conclusion.

Reader, Adin, Cal. Is fasting a duty? Doe promote consecration?

Fasting has been practised in all ages of Jewish and Christian church, and, as you see from Matt. 6: 16-18, not always with best motives. Singing the Gospel Songs in the Ancient Temples—Dining in the Palace of Seti I. — Memorable Journey Along the Nile.

EN ROUTE DOWN THE NILE, FEBRUARY 4, 1898.

The Christian Herald:

WE are now on our way down the Nile, returning to Cairo, after a visit as far south as the first cataract.

EGYPTIAN MUSICIANS.

We have been spending about three weeks. The weather has been the coldest ever experienced in Egypt for twenty years. This has, however, prevented us becoming fatigued while making many excursions into the country on donkeys. Although the roads through villages and fields have been very rough and dusty, yet we all enjoyed the donkey rides much more than we expected we should.

One thing that impressed us first on this trip was the filth and squalor existing among the inhabitants of the land, especially among the Fellahin (poor people), who comprise about four-fifths of the entire population of Egypt, chiefly employed in agricultural pursuits. Their dwelling does not seem to make or keep them cleanly on the outside even, to say nothing of the inward man.

We have visited a large number of ancient tombs and ruined palaces and temples. The most wonderful of these are located at Karnak and Luxor, 450 miles from Cairo. I will not attempt to give a description of late discoveries, nor of the awful grandeur of the ruined temples there, some of them erected two and three thousand years before Christ was born at Bethlehem. One is compelled to feel sorry for the poor, starved-looking donkey boys, who may be seen hovering together on the crumbling banks of the ever shifting river as we approach our landings. On going ashore we are at once surrounded by these boys, each one shouting at the top of his voice that his particular donkey is the best in all Egypt, and that his name is Yankee Doodle, or Rameses the Third, or some other name which the donkeys will surely attract one's attention. While you are trying to persuade the boys that it will not be possible for one to ride more than half of the fifty donkeys offered you up rushes a burly dragoman, and, with long, savage-looking whip, begins to cut and slash right and left among them, scattering them in all directions. Many of them writhing with pain from the effect of the lash. We have always protested against this brutality, but so many are these poor boys to secure the few pennies that would fall to their lot if their donkeys were used, that in a moment they are back urging their claims to our patronage with greater vigor than before.

Yesterday our party of over sixty persons, including a baronet, a knight, and an ex-governor, took lunch in the ruined temple of King Seti I., the father of Rameses the Great, the Pharaoh of the oppression, whose face we looked upon in the museum in Cairo a few days ago. At the conclusion of the repast, one of our party proposed a vote of thanks to King Seti and his wife for their exceeding kindness in furnishing such a magnificent dining-hall for the many pilgrims of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, who would be availing themselves of their kind hospitality. The motion was carried unanimously; after which we all joined heartily in our farewell song to the tombs and decaying temples of Egypt.

All hail the power of Jesus' name;
Let angels prostrate fall.
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all.

To-day we visited Assiout, one of the most flourishing towns on the Nile, where we held a service for the students in the American Mission, conducted by Rev. Alexander, under the direction of the United Presbyterian Church of the United States.

This school is one of the most encouraging things we have witnessed in this country. Not less than five hundred students, bright young men, boys, and girls attended the service. In addition to these, there was a large number of ministers and missionaries present from all over Egypt, their General Conference being in session. Most of those present understood the English language, and were able to follow the addresses and sacred songs. Sir Andrew McDonald, of Edinburgh, Ex-Governor Flower, of New York, and others spoke briefly. To-morrow we arrive at Cairo, and hasten on to Jerusalem. From there I may have time for another letter.

Saintly Faces.

Sometimes in passing through a crowd we see a face that attracts us by its sweetness of expression. Perhaps it is an old face, crowned with a glory of hoary hairs; yet love, joy and peace shine out of every dot and wrinkle in it. Sometimes it is a young face that beams with health and purity and beauty. But whether old or young, when we see that unmistakable soul-light in a face, we know that the heart behind it is pure, the life is good, and that the body thus illuminated is the temple of the Holy Spirit. To keep the mind occupied with good, pure, useful, beautiful, and divine thoughts precludes the possibility of thinking about, and thus being tempted by, things sinful, low or gross. In the habit of thinking pure thoughts lies the secret of being pure in heart; and in the daily and nightly meditation in the law of the Lord is the best and the only safeguard against many of the sins which defile the carnal heart, and in time surely debase and blacken the countenance.

THE TEMPLE OF RAMESES III. AT KARNAK, EGYPT.

A Hive of Busy Workers.

The Ruggles Street Church, Boston, and its Many Spiritual, Charitable, Educational, and Industrial Agencies.

ONE of the most interesting illustrations of successful open church work is afforded by that of the Ruggles Street Baptist Church, Boston, Mass. In modern church work the fact is receiving more and more recognition that common sense business management, inspired by the spirit of godliness, is a valuable hand-maid to spiritual ministration. Business men are bringing their talents to the aid of the church, wealthy men are spending their gold in her service, and social problems, which have vexed statesmen and philosophers, are being solved rapidly and quietly by the spirit of Christian enterprise, which is reaching out everywhere, to feed, to clothe, to educate, to develop. It has been said of the magnificent system which prevails in the Ruggles Street Church that it "is like that of a great business establishment." The offices, directly adjoining the church, are extensive, comprising individual rooms for the conduct of the different departments. On the first floor are the employment office, the reading-room, offices of the Superintendent of Relief, and the church visitor. On the second floor are the offices of the pastor, assistant pastor, their clerical assistants, and of the superintendent of the Bible school. Departments and sub-departments all work smoothly and successfully under a common head, the pastor, Rev. Edward D. Burr, a man of exceptional spiritual gift as well as administrative ability. The assistant pastor is Rev. John R. Hague. The various committees on ministration, woman's relief work, etc., are each under a salaried head: for this church is free from hampering poverty. It owes this immunity to the generous support of Mr. D. S. Ford, a successful business man, who is using his wealth and his talents in advancing the Kingdom of Christ.

REV. E. D. BURR.

RELIEF STOREROOM.

THE SENIOR SEWING-CLASS.

The church is the centre of large industrial and educational activities. It is surrounded by struggling masses of men, women, and children in need of everything that would seem to make life worth living. They need spiritual enlightenment. They need food, and raiment, and work; and more than these, they need the industrial training which will enable them to command work. An examination of the visitation system will show that this is an important feature. Every home within a mile and a half of the church receives at least two visits every year from the church visitor or census taker. He carries with him an indexed book of record, in which he registers the information derived. This information, at the close of the day's visiting, is transferred to a blank card, which is filed alphabetically in the office. The church's further energies are founded upon the record thus kept of the number, sex, age, need, etc., of all who dwell within the radius of activities. In 1897, 20,000 such visits are indexed, as many as 500 calls being made by church representatives in one week. Those with whom the church thus comes in touch are drawn into its influences, and become part of its active force in reaching out for others. Its social atmosphere attracts and holds. The Ruggles Street Quartette, which has charmed Bostonians for nineteen years, is one of its strongest features. The church has not neglected to make use of the drawing power of music. There is a singing club of 200 members; and the children have large singing classes. The Easter music of Ruggles street is famous. Church socials, one for the little folks and another for their elders, are held every month; and every three months there is a great gathering in the men's rally. At Sunday service, cordial greetings are exchanged, and the new comer, be he never so modest and shrinking, cannot escape kindly courtesies.

The congregation does not limit its evangelical labors to its own field, broad as that may be. The study of other fields, and the sending of gifts to other fields, is encouraged, and missionary meetings for these purposes are frequent. One of its numerous agencies for reaching the public is by Gospel wagons. Every Sunday in warm weather these wagons are found surrounded by crowds in the park, and such effective work has been done in this way that more people are reached in summer than in winter.

The educational and industrial work done in the Friendford Industrial School, as this branch of church activity is known, is worthy of particular interest. Four hundred persons attend the classes, which give instruction in wood-carving, sloyd, modeling, freehand and mechanical drawing, arithmetic, type-writing, stenography, domestic science, sewing, millinery, embroidery, cooking, physical culture, etc. A very charming incident in the social life was a recent reception to the minister and his wife, which was given by the children's cooking class. Little folks are taught how to make their own clothes, and taught in a way which redeems labor from drudgery.

In the Bible school, which enrolls more than 1,000 members, there are six departments under the general direction of Mr. W. K. Andem, the General Superintendent. One of these is the Workingmen's Bible Class, taught by Mr. Russell, and another is the Boys' Brigade; there is also a class in New Testament Greek.

Excellent work for temperance is being done by the temperance class of seventy-five redeemed men, whose own experience has made them towers of strength for unfortunate brethren. Other agencies of relief are the medical and maternity departments, and the sterilized milk department, which dispenses wholesome food to a daily average of twenty-nine mothers. The bi-weekly mothers' meetings are of exceptional value in that practical instruction in the care of babies is given. The employment office is another useful factor. It found employment last year for 820 persons. This, as well as other features of relief work, are conducted in connection with the Associated Charities, and before help is given the most careful investigations are made. In 1897, 25,956 pounds of food, thirty-six tons of coal, 2,431 garments, 332 pairs of shoes, and $7,957.48 were given away.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

STONING OF STEPHEN.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Acts 7: 56-60, ... "Behold I see the heavens opened," etc.

STEPHEN had been preaching a rousing sermon, and the people could not stand it. They resolved to do as men sometimes would like to do in this day, if they dared, with some plain preacher of righteousness—kill him. The only way to silence this man was to knock the breath out of him. So they rushed Stephen out of the gates of the city, and with curse, and whoop, and bellow they brought him to the cliff, as was the custom when they wanted to take away life by stoning. Having brought him to the edge of the cliff, they pushed him off. After he had fallen they came and looked down, and seeing that he was not yet dead, they began to drop stones upon him, stone after stone. Amid this horrible rain of missiles, Stephen clambers up on his knees and folds his hands, while the blood drips from his temples to his cheeks, from his cheeks to his garments, from his garments to the ground: and then, looking up, he makes two prayers—one for himself and one for his murderers. "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit;" that was for himself. "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge;" that was for his assailants. Then, from pain and loss of blood, he swooned away and fell asleep.

I want to show you to-day five pictures. Stephen gazing into heaven. Stephen looking at Christ. Stephen stoned. Stephen in his dying prayer. Stephen asleep.

First, look at Stephen gazing into heaven. Before you take a leap you want to know where you are going to land. Before you climb a ladder you want to know to what point the ladder reaches. And it was right that Stephen, within a few moments of heaven, should be gazing into it. We would all do well to be found in the same posture. There is enough in heaven to keep us gazing. A man of large wealth may have statuary in the hall, and paintings in the sitting-room, but he has the chief pictures in the art gallery, and there hour after hour you walk with catalogue and glass and ever-increasing admiration. Well, heaven is the gallery where God has gathered the chief treasures of his realm. The whole universe is his palace. In this lower room where we stop there are many adornments: tessellated floor of amethyst, and on the winding cloud-stairs are stretched out canvases on which commingle azure, and purple, and saffron, and gold. But heaven is the gallery in which the chief glories are gathered. There are the brightest robes. There are the richest crowns. There are the highest exhilarations. John says of it: "The kings of the earth shall bring their honor and glory into it." And I see the procession forming, and in the line come all empires, and the stars spring up into an arch for the hosts to march under. The hosts keep step to the sound of earthquake and the pitch of avalanche from the mountains, and the flag they bear is the flame of a consuming world, and all the vestibules burst out with harps and trumpets and myriad voiced acclamation of angelic dominion to welcome them in, and so the kings of the earth bring their honor and glory into it. Do you wonder that good people often stand, like Stephen, looking into heaven?

We all have many loved friends there. There is not a room in this house to-day so shuttered in [illegible] there is some one in heaven with whom he once sang hymns. As a man gets older the number of his celestial acquaintances very rapidly multiplies. We have not had one glimpse of them since last night we kissed them good-by, and they went away, but still we stand gazing at heaven. As some one of our friends go across the sea, we stand on the dock, or on the steamer, and watch them, and after awhile the hull of the vessel disappears, and then there is only a patch of sail on the sky, and soon that is gone, and they are all out of sight, and yet we stand looking in the same direction; so when our friends go away from us into the future world we keep looking down through the Narrows, and gazing and gazing, as though we expected that they would come out and stand on some cloud, and give us one glimpse of their blissful and transfigured faces.

While you long to join their companionship, and the years and the days go with such tedium that they break your heart, and the viper of pain and sorrow and bereavement keeps gnawing at your vitals, you stand still, like Stephen, gazing into heaven. You wonder if they have changed since you saw them last. You wonder if they would recognize your face now, so changed has it been with trouble. You wonder if, amid the myriad delights they have, they care as much for you as they used to when they gave you a helping hand and put their shoulder under your burdens. You wonder if they look any older; and sometimes in the evening-tide, when the house is all quiet, you wonder if you should call them by their first name if they would not answer; and perhaps sometimes you do make the experiment, and when no one but God and yourself are there you distinctly call their names and listen, and sit gazing into heaven.

Pass on now, and see Stephen looking upon Christ. My text says he saw the Son of man at the right hand of God. Just how Christ looked in this world, just how he looks in heaven, we cannot say. A writer in the time of Christ says, describing the Saviour's personal appearance, that he had blue eyes and light complexion, and a very graceful structure: but I suppose it was all guess work. The painters of the different ages have tried to imagine the features of Christ and put them upon canvas; but we will have to wait until with our own eyes we see him and with our own ears we can hear him. And yet there is a way of seeing and hearing him now. I have to tell you that unless you see and hear Christ on earth, you will never see and hear him in heaven. Look! There he is. Behold the Lamb of God. Can you not see him? Then pray to God to take the scales off your eyes. Look that way—try to look that way. His voice comes down to you this day—comes down to the blindest, to the deafest soul, saying: "Look unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved, for I am God, and there is none else." Proclamation of universal emancipation for all slaves. Proclamation of universal amnesty for all rebels.

Oh, wonderful invitation! You can take it to-day, and stand at the head of the darkest alley in any city, and say: "Come! Clothes for your rags, salve for your sores, a throne for your eternal reigning." A Christ that talks like that, and acts like that, and pardons like that—do you wonder that Stephen stood looking at him? I hope to spend eternity doing the same thing. I must see him: I must look upon that face once clouded with my sin, but now radiant with my pardon. I want to touch that hand that knocked off my shackles. I want to hear that voice which pronounced my deliverance. Behold him, little children, for if you live to three score years and ten, you will see none so fair. Behold him, ye aged ones, for he only can shine through the dimness of your failing eyesight. Behold him, earth. Behold him, heaven. What a moment when all the nations of the saved shall gather around Christ! All faces that way. All thrones that way, gazing on Jesus.

He's worth it all the nations knew,
Sure the whole earth would love him, too.

I pass on now, and look at Stephen stoned. The world has always wanted to get rid of good men. Their very life is an assault upon wickedness. Out with Stephen through the gates of the city. Down with him over the precipices. Let every man come up and drop a stone upon his head. But these men did not so much kill Stephen as they killed themselves. Every stone rebounded upon them. While these murderers were transfixed by the scorn of all good men, Stephen lives in the admiration of all Christendom. Stephen stoned, but Stephen alive. So all good men must be pelted. All who will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. It is no eulogy of a man to say that everybody likes him. Show me any one who is doing all his duty to state or church and I will show you men who utterly abhor him.

If all men speak well of you, it is because you are either a laggard or a dolt. If a steamer makes rapid progress through the waves, the water will boil and foam all around it. Brave soldiers of Jesus Christ will hear the carbines click. When I see a man with voice, and money, and influence all on the right side, and some caricature him, and some sneer at him, and some denounce him, and men who pretend to be actuated by right motives conspire to cripple him, to cast him out, to destroy him, I say: "Stephen stoned."

When I see a man in some great moral or religious reform battling against grog-shops, exposing wickedness in high places, by active means trying to purify the church and better the world's estate, and I find that some of the newspapers anathematize him, and men, even good men, oppose him and denounce him, because, though he does good, he does not do it in their way, I say: "Stephen stoned." The world, with infinite spite, took after John Frederick Oberlin, and Paul, and Stephen of the text. But you notice, my friends, that while they assaulted him they did not succeed really in killing him. You may assault a good man, but you cannot kill him.

On the day of his death, Stephen spoke before a few people in the Sanhedrim; now he addresses all Christendom. Paul the Apostle stood on Mars Hill addressing a handful of philosophers who knew not so much about science as a modern school-girl. To-day he talks to all the millions of Christendom about the wonders of justification and the glories of resurrection. John Wesley was howled down by the mob to whom he preached, and they threw bricks at him, and they denounced him, and they jostled him, and they spat upon him, and yet to-day, in all lands, he is admitted to be the great father of Methodism. Booth's bullet vacated the Presidential chair; but from that spot of coagulated blood on the floor in the box of Ford's theatre there sprang up the new life of a nation. Stephen stoned, but Stephen alive.

Pass on now and see Stephen in his dying prayer. His first thought was not how the stones hurt his head, nor what would become of his body. His first thought was about his spirit. "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." The murderer standing on the trap door, the black cap being drawn over his head before the execution, may grimace about the future, but you and I have no shame in confessing some anxiety about where we are going to come out. You are not all body. There is within you a soul. I see it gleam from your eyes, and I see it brightening and irradiating your countenance. The probability is that your body will at last find a sepulchre in some of the cemeteries that surround your town or city. There is no doubt but that your obsequies will be decent and respectful, and you will be able to pillow your head under the maple, or the Norway spruce, or the cypress or the blossoming tir; but this spirit about which Stephen prayed, what direction will that take? What guide will escort it? What gate will open to receive it? What cloud will be cleft for its pathway? And have I no anxiety about it? Have you no anxiety about it?

I do not care what you do with my body when my soul is gone, or whether you believe in cremation or inhumation. I shall sleep just as well in a wrapping of sackcloth as in satin lined with eagle's down. But my soul — before this day passes, I will find out where it will land. Thank God for the intimation of my text, that when we die Jesus takes us. That answers all questions for me. What though there were massive bars between here and the city of light, Jesus could remove them. What though there were great Saharas of darkness, Jesus could illume them. What though I get weary on the way, Christ could lift me on his omnipotent shoulder. What though there were chasms to cross, his hand could transport me. Then let Stephen's prayer be my dying litany: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." It may be in that hour I will be too feeble to say a long prayer. It may be in that hour we will not be able to say the "Lord's Prayer," for it has seven petitions. Perhaps we may be so feeble even to say the infant prayer our mothers taught us, which John Quincy Adams, seventy years of age, said every night when he put his head upon his pillow:

Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep.

We may be too feeble to employ either of these familiar forms; but this prayer of Stephen is so short, is so concise, is so earnest, is so comprehensive, we shall all will be able to say that: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Oh, if that prayer be answered, how sweet it will be to die!

Pass on now, and I will show you one more picture, and that is Stephen asleep. With a pathos and simplicity peculiar to the Scriptures, the text says of Stephen: "He fell asleep." "Oh," you say, "what a place that was to sleep! A hard bed under him, stones falling down upon him, the blood streaming, the mob howling. What a place it was to sleep!" And yet my text takes that symbol of slumber to describe his departure, so sweet was it, so contented was it, so peaceful was it. Stephen had lived a very laborious life, his chief work had been to care for the poor. How many loaves of bread he distributed, how many cots of sickness and distress he blessed with ministries of kindness and love, I do not know; but from the way he lived, and the way he preached, and the way he died, I know he was a laborious Christian. But that is all over now. He has pressed the cup to his last fainting lip. He has taken the last insult from his enemies. The last stone to whose crushing weight he is susceptible has been hurled. Stephen is dead. The disciples come. They take him down. They wash away the blood from his wounds. They straighten out the broken limbs. They brush back the tangled hair from the brow, and then they pass around to look upon the calm countenance of him who had lived for the poor and died for the truth. Stephen asleep!

I have seen the sea driven with the hurricane until the tangled foam caught in the rigging, and wave rising after wave seemed as if about to storm the heavens, and then I have seen the tempest drop, and the waves crouch, and everything become smooth and burnished as though a camping place for the glory of heaven. So I have seen a man, whose life has been tossed and driven, come down at last to an infinite calm, in which there was the hush of heaven's lullaby.

I have not the faculty to tell the weather. I can never tell by the setting sun whether there will be a drought or not. I cannot tell by the blowing of the wind whether it will be fair weather or foul on the morrow. But I can prophesy, and I will prophesy what weather it will be when you, O Christian, come to die. You may have very rough now. It may be this pain, one annoyance, the next another: one annoyance. It may be this year one bereavement, the next another bereavement. Before this year has passed you may ask to beg for bread, or ask for a scuttle of coal or a pair of shoes; but at that time Christ will come in and darkness will go out. And though there may be no hand to close your eyes, and no bread which to rest your dying head, and no candle to lift the night, the odors of the hanging garden will regale your soul, and at your bedside will halt the chariot of the King. No more rents to pay, no more agony because flour has gone up, no more struggle with "the world, the flesh and the devil;" but peace—long, deep, everlasting peace. Stephen asleep!

Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep;
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Uninjured by the last of foes.
Asleep in Jesus, far from thee
Thy kindred and their graves may be
But there is still a blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep.

You have seen enough for one painting. No one can successfully examine more than five pictures in a day. Therefore we stop, having seen this cluster of Divine Raphaels—Stephen gazing into heaven; Stephen looking at Christ; Stephen stoned; Stephen in his dying prayer; Stephen asleep.

CHINA'S RIVER HIGHWAY.

A Missionary Journey on the Great Yangtze River, which Connects the Quaint Walled Cities of Central China—Progress of Mission Work.

BY MRS. S. L. BALDWIN.

OUR four chief missionary stations in this part of China are all on the Yangtze, the great river, sometimes

The Central China Mission the Methodist Episcopal has its work in three vinces—Kiang-Su, Ngan- and Kiang-Si; but its centres from which it reaches out these provinces are the four large Chin-Kiang, 150 miles above hai; Nan-King, fifty miles farther river; Wu-Hu, fifty miles from st; and Kin-Kiang, 100 miles far- All of these are reached by com- steamers from Shanghai. Fifteen up the Grand Canal which opens river five miles above Chin-Kiang, ancient historical city of Yan Chow, is our fifth centre of work.

The river is like a great artery through untry with many smaller canals as penetrating everywhere, and by es our workers go out from the five centres to innumerable walled cities, and villages. Chin-Kiang is our reat centre above Shanghai. It is lled city of about 300,000 people, beautifully located on hills by the Here we have the usual outfit of s and girls' and boys' boarding- s. The girls' school, under the care ss Mary Robinson, is one of the nest I have seen in China. Noth- taught save with a view to Chris- haracter. Only that music is taught ll aid in spiritual life, and the finest g I have heard in China was in this which proves that the Chinese can in singing if taught by experts. White, who is the teacher here, has d the girls in this school to render creditably portions of the Messiah. Bible is the most important text- in our girls' schools in China: in quence we have well-trained Chris- minds. We have here also a women children's hospital and dispensary, conducted by Dr. Lucy Hoag, y Katie Hoag Chen, a graduate of irls' boarding school and recently ated, has been Dr. Hoag's valued as- t in hospital work. I visited the s of Mrs. Chen and Mrs. Yung, the of the teachers in the boys' and schools and found them models of and neatness. Such homes in this en land are indeed as lights upon a hill. The contrast between them and their occupants, to the wretched, unclean heathen homes, is indescribably great.

Miss Robinson has organized a circle of our Women's Christian Temperance Union in her school, and it is wonderful what these girls know of the work and workers in this cause in our homeland. From this side of the world, these bright Chinese girls have watched with liveliest interest Mrs. Mary Hunt's brave efforts to secure temperance instruction for our public schools. It was a great delight to me to see our white-ribbon symbol of temperance and purity upon the dresses of these interesting Chinese girls.

The annual meeting of our Central China Mission was held in the old capital city of Nan-King. It was a time of great profit and refreshment and a thousand additions reported in membership for the year, the greatest of any year. The evangelistic meetings were full of spiritual life, while the business meetings were conducted with the utmost care and faithfulness. The Women's Conference, held separately from that of the men, was of special interest to me. The Christian women Bible readers and others came in from all directions, and took great interest in every part of the work considered.

Nan-King is a great and most interesting city. Its wall of thirty-two miles is the longest of any city in the Empire, and is ninety feet high at its highest point. It has thirteen gates, of which nine are in use. A forlorn house still remains called "The Ice Palace," where, it is said, the Emperor used to shut up his obstreperous wives. Like all the Yangtze valley cities, Nan-King suffered terribly with the Yai Ping rebellion. Large portions of the ground within the walls were swept of houses, and are now under farm cultivation. Yet it is said to have 500,000 people. It is the centre of a great trade and for a brief two years had a most advanced governor, who constructed what is doubtless the finest road in the Empire. It is finely graded and paved, is twenty-five feet broad, and extends ten miles from the northwest to the south east corner, diagonally through the city.

On each side the whole length, willows are planted three deep, and when these are grown this road in that ancient capital will be one of the finest avenues in the world. When I sat in a station in Tien Tsin awaiting a railroad train, and later rode in a coach on this fine avenue across old Nan-King, away in the centre of China, I felt almost as doubtful of my identity as did the shorn old woman in our nursery rhymes, when she said, "If I be I, my little dog will know me!" Of course, over on this side of the world, even coach riding must vary a little from the home method. So here in Nan-King we enter the coach, the door is shut, and the horse is attached to the coach, and then our driver starts the horse, running beside him until he is on a vigorous trot, when, with a run and a jump, the driver lands on the seat in front, and away we go in Western style.

As we went on to our third centre, Wu-Hu, fifty miles further up the river, we found the land on both sides flooded from the long-continued and unusual rains for the season, until when we reached Wu-Hu the river was simply doubled in width, and from the windows of our mission homes, located on a high hill, we seemed to be on an island, with water all about us, and in fact only a mere path connected the hill with the city.

Wu-Hu has a population of 100,000, and is a very important centre of work, being the distributing centre of a vast region of country through the river and innumerable canals. In this region quantities of rice are raised and shipped from here, even down to Canton, and I am sorry to say great quantities of opium are also shipped from here. From this centre our missionaries can, with comparative comfort in boats, reach numerous stations and lose little time in travel, as study, writing, etc., can be carried on in a boat, as it cannot on horse or in sedan chair.

Four miles from Wu-Hu, on a mountain, is a Buddhist temple, in which was a priest, reported to be very holy, who fasted until he died of starvation, whereupon his body (what remained of it) was gilded and set up for worship, and it is now in the temple as any other idol and regarded with special reverence. From Wu-Hu we went south, but still up the river, 100 miles, to Kin Kiang, our oldest station in Central China. It is located near the border of the fine Kiang-Si Province and near to Hu Pek, where we also have work. The Kiang-Si Province, with the country along the Po Yang lake, is productive, beautiful and rich. This is the region of the great porcelain industry, and here it was first made. Our very word Kaoline comes from the Kan-hire range of mountains in this region. Here this white earth, the base of porcelain, was first so used, and Western countries first received their knowledge of such use of it from here, the earth being made up into small bricks and carried over into England and France as specimens of what was used here in the manufacture of porcelain.

This whole Central China region is open to the work of the missionary. The great lack is workers. Here and there amid vast numbers of people, we have a few faithful workers, every one of whom is working far beyond strength and carrying a burden of responsibility, and facing awful need that are enough alone to break a strong constitution. In addition to this other dangers appear. An element is entering everywhere, that means always serious trouble to Protestant work. In all of these river cities, and indeed throughout the Empire, the Jesuits have come and bought up large property. They own a great part of the river front of these cities with other very valuable property, and their income from rents is undoubtedly very large.

They do not go to the many and right regions where no Christian work is being done, but invariably find a place near other missions and in many places they make us great trouble. Only a wall separates them from our mission in Kin Kiang. They have abundance of means at command and their governments vigorously protect their followers and support every claim for damages, no matter how unreasonable, and in any struggle between their church members and ours, and they are ever ready to stir up strife—the whole force of their governments is used—while the American consul stands helpless for lack of any sort of support from his government. We greatly fear that serious trouble is ahead because of these conditions.

With doors wide open and having the favor of the people to a very large extent, we are in constant danger wherever the Jesuit appears, for if he cannot buy our people off, he will persecute them unto death and his Government will support him. It is a time for all Christians to earnestly pray that the Ruler of nations may in mercy protect these brave men and women who toil on, preaching and teaching the pure Gospel of Christ in this far off land, amid many dangers.

The Sunday School

REVIEW OF THE QUARTER.

International Sunday School Lesson for March 27—Golden Text Matt. 16:10.

THE twelve lessons comprised in the review cover the events of the first two years of our Lord's ministry, as they are recorded by Matthew. His method of writing was to group his facts according to subject matter rather than to follow the chronological order. Thus, as we find from the other Evangelists, he brings together events and teachings from various periods, so that his readers might see how Christ acted in relation to pending questions, and what he said on different occasions on different topics. A comparison of his Gospel with those of Mark and Luke, who both deal as he does, with the Galilean ministry chiefly, John being concerned principally with the work in Jerusalem, will show the object he had in view. It was evidently not so much to write a biography of our Lord, though it is a very beautiful biography, as to write a manual which should be useful to the churches, which needed to know what Christ did and taught. Thus we have in these twelve lessons, after the inauguration of Christ's work and the divine indorsement of it at his baptism, the spectacle of Jesus under temptation; the manifesto of his distinctive principles in the Sermon on the Mount which, doubtless, comprised much that was delivered on subsequent occasions, the organization of the followers of Christ, and instructions to them as to their method of evangelization and their first preaching journey; his teaching about the Sabbath; and, finally, the group of parables showing by a series of familiar pictures the character of the kingdom which Christ came to establish. With these Matthew gives, for the purpose of shedding light on Christ's difficulties and dangers and on his future movements, the account of the martyrdom of John the Baptist. Reading as a whole the fourteen chapters, from which the lessons are taken, we see that Matthew conceived of Christ as the long expected King, the Messiah who fulfilled the predictions of the prophets, and furnished in his own person the realization of all the truths of which the ceremonies of the Temple were types. He wrote for Jews as Luke wrote for Gentiles, and showed how these were the starting from the background of Jewish history and Jewish law and literature and forecast the hope, making him the human manifestation of the Godhead for which all previous ages were a preparation.

Whose fan is in his hand. (Matt. 3: 12). The allusion is to the Oriental method of winnowing. A man with a big shovel throws the grain into the air, and the wind blows away the husk, while the grain falls to the floor by its own weight. Many came to John the Baptist because it was the fashion of the time, and not because they really repented of their sins, and John baptized them. Probably they thought themselves safe after receiving baptism, as many now do, but John warned them that there would be a test applied by one who had a fan in his hand. Then it would be seen how many of them were sincere. Men may be deceived by appearances, but Christ will detect the hypocrite. The story is told of a number of young people who visited a famous mineral spring; They drank the water, famous for its healing virtues, and then sat around talking. Suddenly the appearance of one of them caused general alarm. She was a young lady, famous for the beauty of her complexion. But as she sat there among her friends, the ivory whiteness of her skin and the roses on her cheeks were changed to hideous green and purple blotches, resting on a ghastly gray ground. She protested that she felt quite well, and could not understand the alarm of her friends until a mirror was put into her hand. Then she covered her face in shame. Her beautiful complexion was the result of cosmetics, which the sulphur in the spring had chemically affected.

Tempted of the devil. (Matt. 4: 1). Whether Satan appeared in person, or merely suggested these doubts and promptings is not a question of moment. We are told that Christ was tempted as we are and so it may be that temptations reached him as they reach us, as impulses of the mind. The conflict with self is often the conflict with our most formidable enemy. A prominent writer relates a Norwegian legend which shows how this fact had been perceived by the early philosophers. A man thought he was pursued by a "troll." His ricks were fired, his barns unroofed, his cattle destroyed, his lands blasted and his first-born slain. So he lay in wait for the monster where it was supposed to live in a cave near his house, and in the darkness of night he saw it. With a cry he rushed upon it and gripped it about the waist, and it turned upon him and held him by the shoulders. Long he wrestled with it, reeling, staggering, falling and rising again; but at length, a flood of strength came to him, and he overthrew it, and stood over it, with his right hand set hard at its throat. Then he drew his knife to kill it and the moon shot through the clouds, opening an alley of light about it and he saw its face; and lo, the face of the troll was his own. It frequently happens that when a man has conquered himself he has overcome his worst enemy.

The Gospel of the kingdom. (Matt. 4: 23). The word "spell" in old times meant a message, or statement. The recitation a boy gave at a school commencement was the boy's spell. A sermon was the minister's spell. The Gospel is God's spell. Dr. Macgowan, the missionary to China, tells of visiting a district where the Gospel had never been preached. The people, however, had heard that the foreigners were teaching strange doctrines in other places, and when they learned that one of them was coming to their town, they prepared to resist him. The most learned man in the town was appointed to lead the opposition. It was necessary to hear what the foreigner had to say, so Macgowan found he would be allowed to say a few words before the storm broke. "I am come," he said, "to tell you about a Father in heaven who loves you." This was something so different from what they expected that all opposition melted away; they heard him to the end, and many became Christians.

"JESUS SAID, 'SUFFER LITTLE CHILDREN, AND FORBID THEM NOT TO COME UNTO ME.'"

Hallowed be thy name. (Matt. 6: 9). Going to a public school, a boy who had been carefully trained at home by a loving father was shocked to hear the boys speak of their fathers as "the governor," or "the old man." "How formal and stilted you are!" said one of them to him. "I suppose your father is pretty strict with you. Why don't you speak of him as we do? Are you afraid?" "No," was the reply; "I respect and love him too much."

Thy kingdom come. (Matt. 6: 10). Christ often spoke of his kingdom, but seldom of his church. He wished to reign in the heart. When every man desires above all things to be and do what Christ would have him, this prayer will be answered. It is related that crafty courtiers tried to stir up the Emperor Domitian to persecute the Christians by accusing them of serving another king—one Jesus. Thereupon Domitian summoned the grandchildren of Jude, who had been specially singled out as specimen Christians, to appear before him and give an account of themselves. He particularly inquired as to the law the kingdom to which they belon They showed him their hands which d become horny by hard work, and d him how they lived. THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

UR ARCTIC VISITORS.

A Large Party of Lapps and Finns, and many Reindeer Reach Our Shores.

A NOVEL cargo was recently landed in New York City by the steamship Manitoban. It was nothing less than 537 reindeer, being sent by the Government Yukon Relief Expedition to Alaska. The reindeer, denuded of their fur, bear an absurd resemblance to shaggy calves, are great kickers, and vigorous plungers.

Along with the reindeer the Manitoban brought 418 reindeer sleds, 511 sets of reindeer harness, and about 4,000 bags of reindeer moss which constitutes their food and to a great extent, their drink. When the moss melts and becomes dry, they never need water; but they can live for months without water.

Of more interest than the reindeer were the Lapp, Finn and Norwegian herders and drivers accompanying them. With their families they make a party of 113 emigrants, who have become permanent settlers in the new land to which they are going. There are nineteen women and twenty-six children among them, and six married couples are members of the party. Reindeer drivers and herders are, of course, of nomadic habits, but these are rather intelligent, very domestic, and always insist upon taking their families with them wherever they go. When a permanent change is involved, they also make a point of carrying the pastor of the community along also. The pastor, however, was not with the groups on the Manitoban. Most of them seemed able to read and write, and nearly all were Lutherans.

As far as appearances go, they are an exceedingly squat, queer looking folk, as the curious crowd which gathered at the foot of Sixth street, Jersey City, to watch the disembarkment, are ready to testify. The sight of the jumping, plunging reindeer and their short, sturdy drivers, was great fun, especially for the children who witnessed it. Some of the foreigners were copper-colored, like American Indians, and some of a lighter cast, while others were white. Both sexes and all ages were dressed much alike, in coats made of reindeer hide with the hair on the outside, reindeer skin trousers, rawhide moccasins and odd-looking caps. In the last article of attire, the women and children differed from the men, wearing red skull-caps, while the masculine headgear was somewhat like a composition effect of mortar-board hat and small sofa pillow. All of them had a bit of something red about them: the coats of the men were trimmed with red cloth or embroidery. Evidently the scarlet color is a favorite with the children of the frozen North.

REINDEER FROM LAPLAND.

A GROUP OF RECENTLY-ARRIVED LAPPS AND FINNS.

The Hedgehog as a Pet.

Will Ford, who seems to have a fondness for queer garden pets, says:

I have a great fat hedgehog, which limps about the garden and comes into the kitchen and whines for pork fat and bacon rinds. He came by express, as a Christmas present. Before I had owned him a month he was as tame as a dog, and would come clear across the garden in answer to my whistle. For a time he annoyed me by injudicious thinning among the peas and lettuce, but I weaned him of this by feeding him from the back stoop. He eats bird of any kind, is particularly fond of gingerbread, and will take any risk in order to get a bit of fat pork. In the summer he sleeps out in the rhubarb patch, and always crawls under a wide leaf to avoid the wet when it rains. For winter use I have made him a bed in the greenhouse, where he sleeps under the benches close by the furnace. Whenever I am in the garden—summer or winter, day or night—he is with me, following close at my heels and grunting forth his joy at all times. His ordinary cry is a short, low note—half whine and half grunt—rapidly repeated, sometimes so rapid that it is almost a whir. If he is away when I go to the garden and hears me speak, he will come waddling towards me with a wild "woof, woof" of gladness, which will subside into the ordinary grunt as soon as he is by my side. Though his back is covered with cruel spines, some of which are four inches long, he will play with me and leap about like a glad kitten, and I have never yet been pricked by a quill.

A Clever Japanese Girl.

Kitishima Kata Hashi is her real name, and Otona Watana her pen name, but both mean the same thing, however differently the two may appear when written or sound when uttered—this belongs to the unsolved mysteries of Japanese dialects. Miss Watana is not yet twenty-two. Her pen produces both verse and prose. Her short stories and poems have attracted much public attention, and a collection of the former will soon appear in book form. A Japanese story is also nearly ready for publication. It was in Montreal, Canada, that the little Japanese girl received the greater part of her education, much of which has been self-acquired. She is a stenographer and typewriter, self-taught. When only sixteen years old, she was sent to the West Indies as court reporter and correspondent for the News-Letter, of Kingston, Jamaica. Her reports of the legislative sessions (at which she was the only woman whose presence was permitted) were so brilliant and witty, in spite of being also officially precise, that they aroused much interest in the writer's personality and literary gifts.

Little Huie Quong.

Huie Quong is the name of a happy little China-boy of whom Western papers tell us—not because he is different from other little American China-boys, but because he is a type of some of our future small citizens. When he was a month old his head was not shaved and his queue started according to Chinese custom; and now that he is nearly a year old he is acquiring two languages without more effort than an American baby expends in learning one. The little boy is not hidden away like the average American China-boy, but is much on observation in his father's shop, where all the American boys and girls are quite good to him and are as interested in him as if he were an animated China-doll. His mamma talks English very well, and his nurse's little brother goes to the mission school, where little Huie Quong will doubtless go when he is old enough.

A Father's Regret.

"I shall never forget," wrote Norman McLeod the eminent Scotch preacher, "the impression made upon me during the first year of my ministry by a mechanic whom I had visited, and on whom I urged the paramount duty of family prayer. One day he entered my study, bursting into tears as he said: 'You remember that girl, sir? She was my only child. She died suddenly this morning. She has gone, I hope, to God; but if so, she can tell him, what now breaks my heart, that she never heard a prayer in her father's house, or from her father's lips! Oh, that she were with me but for one day again!'"

A LAPP MOTHER AND BABY.

A Novel Hanging-Basket.

It is said that an odd and effective hanging-basket can be made out of a long-necked gourd. The bowl should be large enough to hold a generous supply of water. Four large holes should be cut at the top of the bowl near the handle, and four smaller ones above and between the larger ones. Different pretty aquatic vines may be grown in this basket, some of them to be trained up around the stem, and others allowed to hang in graceful flowering at their own sweet will. The gourd is suspended by a wire through the end of the neck.

THE PLANTING OF THE APPLE TREE.*

COME, let us plant the apple tree.
Cleave the tough greensward with the spade;
Wide let its hollow bed be made:
Sift the dark mold with kindly care,
And press it o'er them tenderly.
As round the sleeping infant's feet
We softly fold the cradle sheet,
So plant we the apple tree.

What plant we in this apple tree?
Buds, which the breath of summer days
Shall lengthen into leafy sprays;
Boughs where the thrush, with crimson breast,
Shall haunt and sing and hide her nest:
We plant upon the sunny lea
A shadow for the noontide hour,
A shelter from the summer shower,
When we plant the apple tree.

A FIVE DOLLAR PROBLEM.

In a Massachusetts school recently a number of children were asked: "If you had five dollars, all your own, what would you do with it?" The responses came from 669 boys and 638 girls, and were arranged in nine general classes. The sway of the dime novel and the war spirit cut no large figure in the results, as only nine-tenths of one per cent. of the whole number expressed any longing for firearms. Something to eat was the wish of 2.2 per cent., mostly the youngest scholars: travel appealed to 1.7 per cent.: jewelry and clothes to about 16 per cent.: 6 per cent. wanted books, this desire being more marked among the older ones: and 15 per cent. would spend the money for amusements or pets. Of those choosing books, the girls furnished much the larger proportion, as well as of the 14 per cent. that would give to others. It was hardly to be expected that tithe-giving would come to the front in these answers, remarks an exchange. It is evident that the rising generation is not made up of spendthrifts at least, so far as these figures go, whatever may be said about other qualities, for the most marked point about them is that forty-four per cent. of the children who were questioned said that they would put the money in a savings bank.

The Dinner Hour.

In American cities, generally, the dinner hour, with almost all classes, is now between 6 and 8 P. M., but in the rural districts, in very many parts of the country, the old custom of dining at midday or a little after still prevails. London society dines between 8 and 9 P. M., but throughout England the general dining hour is from 1 to 2. In Switzerland and Germany it is the same. France dines between 6 and 8, Austria between 1.30 and 3 P. M., and Italy between 6 and 8 o'clock.

Willard Memorial

The National W. C. T. U. has appointed March 20th as Memorial Day in honor of their president, Miss Frances E. Willard. Miss Willard's last official call was to the unions to observe this day because it was the birthday of Neal Dow. By the terms of the will of Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Anna A. Gordon are appointed her literary executors. They will issue a book as soon as possible covering Miss Willard's life, especially the last ten years.

A Touching Incident.

An interesting story comes from a missionary station in Alaska, concerning two little fellows who died of consumption. One of them, a boy of ten, was baptized just before his final illness, but his companion was not. When the latter had almost lost sight and hearing he continually begged, "Water! water!" They gave it to him to drink; he would thank them as best he could and push it away. When the minister came, the poor little sufferer put his hands to his head, saying: "Water! water!" The man of God understood. "You want to be baptized?" He gave glad assent, and was baptized. After which he quietly sank into that sleep which knows no waking

WHERE WAYFARERS ARE WELCOMED.

The Philanthropic Experiment of a Kind-Hearted New Jersey Citizen—The Terradell Settlement and its Mission.

IN these days of widespread Christian philanthropy, when so many men and women, who have been blessed with worldly prosperity, are employing their wealth to assist others less fortunate than themselves, every year witnesses the establishment of new institutions of the benevolent order. One of the most remarkable institutions of this class is the Terradell Social Settlement, near Trenton, N. J. Mr. Thomas M. Terradell, the founder, is a successful business man, who, for nearly thirty years, has made the aiding of unemployed men a special study. While he was himself a worker, engaged on a railroad, he came in contact with so many of them that his sympathies were awakened in their behalf and he has shared his dinner with them hundreds of times. Being a Christian, besides, he never failed to speak to the men in a way that won their hearts, and then confidence, and which usually resulted in an earnest resolve on their part to lead a better life.

THE BROOM-MAKER.

Several years ago Mr. Terradell, having saved some money, withdrew from the railroad and began to build a house. He set about it in a somewhat novel way, for the house was not to be a private residence, but was designed by the owner to be a home for the poor wayfarers, where unemployed and unfortunate men might be sheltered and fed and cared for, temporarily at least. He chose a site in the rear of the locomotive round-house at Trenton, and erected there a frame building, with a woodshed adjoining. Soon the wanderers began to know the place, and they came in increasing numbers, for whoever did come was sure of a substantial meal, a bath and a clean bed, in return for which a small amount of labor was exacted. They liked and respected Mr. Terradell, and those who could do so, paid him, while those who could not, performed the necessary labor. Some time ago Mr. Terradell purchased a block of land adjoining his home and built on it a large and commodious house, which he devoted to the work he had already begun. It was dedicated with religious services, and was soon crowded with the class of men who had patronized the former building. In the new building (which is shown in the photograph on this page), there are reading rooms for men and women; a chapel, where religious services are held every evening; a sewing room for women; an office, through which employment is secured for deserving persons; neat, clean chambers, and two large bath rooms. Besides the woodyard in the rear, there is an upholsterer's shop, in which furniture is repaired; a shoemaking and cobbler's shop, and a broom manufactory.

That an establishment in which industry plays such a prominent part should be so largely patronized by the idle and unfortunate may surprise many. During the first month in which the home was open, Mr. Terradell had as guests over 800 homeless men and women who had drifted in along the line of the railroad. They were tramps, but they seemed glad to work for lodging and food. In the same block with the large building are several small cottages, which are occupied by the same class of men, who are out of employment. Mr. Terradell finds work for the men, and when they have become self-sustaining they are required to find other quarters and give place to other needy ones. The whole establishment serves as a sort of connecting link between the friendless outcasts and the world of respectable society. Terradell, as the settlement is now known, is in the eastern part of the city of Trenton, and here this last station of industry and return has wrought a wonderful change in a multitude of hearts and lives. It preaches a Gospel of work and self-help, of cleaner lives and purer, more elevating associations. Those who come to the settlement and accept its friendly shelter are made to get acquainted with the Gospel of Jesus and are encouraged to become Christians. There are no other means of subduing sinful passions, transforming wrecked lives and leading the wanderers back to God. Thus the whole tendency of the settlement is reformatory and the broadest sense. Temperance and frugality go hand-in-hand with cleanliness and orderliness, and vice and debauchery are unknown within its gates. It is astonishing how quiet and well-behaved the most unruly and vicious become when they find that they are safe in a friendly haven, and that everything about them is calling upon them to lead a better and a purer life.

As might well be supposed, the Terradell settlement is a heavy burden upon the resources of its conductors. Its inmates are the very offscourings of humanity, but they are men and women with souls worth saving. Moreover, from a purely social aspect, the settlement merits the widest support, since its influence is to decrease crime and vice, to fight disease and to purify society by beginning not at the surface, but at the lowest depth. In assisting these unfortunate men and women, Mr. Terradell and his associates are rendering valuable service. Such a work is deserving of the warmest support from Christian people everywhere.

Changes in Corea.

Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop in her book, "Corea and Her Neighbors," emphasizes the changes which are being wrought in Corea through its liberation from Chinese superstition and caste distinction. In one of the chapters she says:

The more important of the changes during the last three years which are beneficial to Corea may be summarized thus: The connection with China is at an end, and with the victories of Japan the Corean belief in the unconquerable military power of the Middle Kingdom has been exploded and the alliance between two political systems essentially corrupt has been severed. The distinction between patrician and plebian has been abolished, on paper at least, along with domestic slavery and the disabilities which rendered the sons of concubines ineligible for high office. Brutal punishments and tortures are done away with, a convenient coinage has replaced cash, an improved educational system has been launched, a disciplined army and police force has been created, the Chinese literary examinations are no longer the test of fitness for official employment, a small measure of judicial reform has been granted, a railroad from Chemulpo to the capital is being rapidly pushed to completion, the pressure of the Trade Guilds is relaxed, a postal system efficiently worked and commanding confidence has been introduced into all the provinces, the finances of the country are being placed on a sound basis, the change from a land-tax paid in kind to one which is an assessment in money on the value of the land greatly diminishes the opportunities for official "squeezing," and large and judicious retrenchments have been carried out in most of the metropolitan and provincial departments.

How They Helped Cuba.

Thousands of kind hearts and hands are busily helping Cuba, and little groups of good people, all over the Union, moved by the stories of suffering, are sending in their loving gifts. An instance, typical of many others, is mentioned in this letter from readers in Gloversville, New York:

Dear "Christian Herald":—Under the auspices of the Mercy and Help Department of the North Main Street Epworth League, we have sent to the freight office to-day two well-packed barrels and a small box for the suffering in Cuba. They were filled with light clothing for men, women, and children; also oatmeal, rice, and canned goods. Thanking you for the pamphlets you sent us, and trusting in God that relief will soon come to his children. Yours in Christ,

MRS. JOHN SHEAR, Chairman.

The Proportions of the Ark.

At a recent meeting of the British Institute of Marine Engineers in Bristol, Mr. Aisbitt, a leading member, gave a comparison of the dimensions of Noah's Ark with vessels of the present day, and stated that for sailing ships the dimensions of the Ark could hardly be excelled.

For steamers, if one or two breadths were added to the length for machinery space, they would, he said, arrive at some of the best proportions acknowledged for present trans-Atlantic steamers. As to the Ark, there is no doubt that Noah must have been an exceptionally good naval architect, as we are, at the end of the nineteenth century, building vessels of practically the same dimensions, it having been demonstrated that they are better seaboats than, and have superior sailing qualities to vessels of different proportions. It is a matter of history that in the early part of the seventeenth century Peter Hans, of Rome, built two ships after the model or proportions of the Ark. These vessels were, as might be imagined, objects of ridicule and scorn at the time; but experience demonstrated that they carried more cargo than vessels of similar tonnage measurement but different dimensions, and, in addition, made quicker passages.

A Unique Rescue Work

The Sunday Breakfast Association and Its Labors for the Unfortunate.

(See colored illustration on the first page.)

AMONG the many notable charities of Philadelphia, those of the Sunday Breakfast Association demand prominent attention. This organization has been in operation for a number of years, and has been the means of accomplishing much good among the homeless men of Philadelphia. Several years ago the Association was greatly impressed with the desirability of establishing an Industrial Rescue Home, where those desiring to lead useful Christian lives might be provided with temporary shelter, and where the labor should in some degree bear the expense of their support. Recently the Rev. Robert A. Pierce, a leading evangelist and energetic Christian worker, was requested by the Association to undertake the management of its affairs and assist in devising broad plans for reaching the idle and unfortunate classes. Arrangements have been completed for the establishment of rescue homes for men and women; a training school for children; a dispensary for the sick; an orphanage for the homeless waifs of the slums, and also for conducting open-air work from the platforms of gospel wagons among the non-church-going masses and those who cannot be reached otherwise.

Many conversions are reported as the result of the meetings at the association headquarters. During five weeks of evangelistic meetings, over twelve hundred men were rescued. At a recent meeting nearly three hundred wanderers were present.

Our illustration on the first page represents a scene which is truly typical of the work of the Association. A large audience of wanderers—the poorest of the poor—is seen in the enjoyment of a Sunday breakfast in the chapel at Eleventh and Wood streets. Cold, hungry and friendless, they have entered the comfortable hall of the Association, and find there a cordial welcome, together with a steaming meal of sandwiches and coffee. When it is finished, the audience listens with keen appreciation to a brief Gospel sermon, in which they are urged to bring their troubles at the foot of the cross and to accept Jesus as the sinner's friend and saviour. These Sunday morning meetings are usually led by Mr. Ivan Bean, a Christian business man and a strong supporter of the work.

Mr. Pierce has a remarkable faculty for reaching people through the eye as well as the ear, and during his evangelistic experience has made excellent use of the "pictured truth," which he frequently employs to advantage in his rescue and other work in connection with the Sunday Breakfast Association.

All who are interested in this grand work for the reclamation of the unfortunate will receive the fullest information by addressing Mr. Pierce at No. 1832 Arch avenue, Philadelphia.

THE ECLIPSE OF THE SUN.

GRADUALLY the reports are coming in from the various parties sent to India to observe the recent eclipse of the sun. From all come expressions of delight at the success of the observations. The weather was all that could be desired, and the arrangements, previously made with the utmost care, were carried through without a hitch and led to most satisfactory results. Never before had astronomers so favorable an opportunity for their study of the phenomenon. Newly-invented instruments, and, above all, the aid of photography, enabled them to obtain with precision the actual facts. Of their return, we shall doubtless have a scientific report of their observations and a statement of the theories they deduce from them. In the meantime a private letter from an unscientific writer, who witnessed the eclipse, will give an idea of the spectacle. He says: "When I first saw it, a small part of the sun's circumference was obscured. The progress of the moon was scarcely perceptible, but gradually the sun was blotted out, the temperature fell considerably and the wind began to grow less. The sky overhead was dark blue, fading into gray, and finally into lilac near the horizon. The scene was now very remarkable, for in spite of the usual glorious orb of day there hung in the zenith a great black disk, black as the blackest night, from behind which and intensifying if possible the inky blackness, long streamers of ghastly luminous ether stretched far into space, assisting to maintain the dim twilight with which we were enshrouded. Stars twinkled here and there, and a planet in close proximity to the sun—probably Venus—shone out with great brilliancy. Two and a half minutes this extraordinary spectacle lasted; then the fine golden lunar hoop emerged from under the opposite edge of the black moon, slowly widening to crescent reversed and increasing until at 1.30 P. M. (three hours from first contact) the sun blazed once more with all previous fierce glory, and the eclipse was numbered with the past." It is a pity that such an event should give rise to opposite errors in the minds of the two classes of observers. The Oriental, who sees it with consternation as the sign of God's anger, is not more to be pitied than the scientist, who fails to see in the marvelous regularity of the universe on which he depends in predicting the eclipse, a proof of God's guiding and controlling power.

I will cover the heaven and make the stars thereof black: I will cover the sun with a cloud and the bright lights of heaven will I make dark (Ezek. 32: 7.)

Used to Save Life.

An interesting relic is to be exhibited at the forthcoming exhibition at Omaha, Neb. This is the first shot ever fired in the United States to save life. On January 12, 1830, the Ayrshire, a large immigrant vessel with 202 passengers on board was wrecked off the coast of Long Island. Many of the imperilled passengers were women and children, who were either crowded into one of the small deckhouses or lashed to the bulwarks and rigging to prevent their being swept overboard. The night was dark and bitter cold and for two hours despair reigned on board, for there was little hope that the ship would hold together until morning and no hope of escape should she go to pieces before that time. However, about midnight the half-frantic company beheld a flash of light inshore, then detected a sound as of a muffled cannon, and a moment later heard a heavy iron ball crash on board. Attached to it was a life line to which a larger line was soon drawn to the ship by the sailors, and then came the life car, then a new and untried device. It was a small iron boat, covered over so that it was very nearly alike on both sides, and having in the top an opening through which persons to the number of six or seven could crawl and then shut themselves up, when they would be hauled ashore. To some of the more timid the remedy seemed almost as bad as the disease, but all finally concluded that in the little ark was to be found their only safety, and eventually all save one were taken to the land without the smallest mishap. The vessel sank in the sand and remained there more than twenty years. Then a strong current dug away the sand and the old wreck was exposed. A party of wreckers went on board and in searching the cabin found the old ball. There was no doubt of its identity, and it was returned to the companionship of the little mortar which sent it whizzing seaward on its errand of humanity more than twenty years before. The mind that shrinks in horror from the sight of a cannon ball, remembering how such missiles plough a lane of dead through the ranks of an army, can view this ball without repulsion, knowing that its mission was one of help and compassion. So it will be with everything in that better day yet to dawn on the world when all the weapons of war will have beneficent uses.

They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks (Micah 4: 3).

A Mournful Journey.

A tattered old canvas-covered wagon recently passed through St. Joseph, Mo., with as sad a burden as ever the citizens saw. The driver was a farmer who was going from Wallace Co., Kans., to Winfield, Ill. To a sympathetic acquaintance he told his story. He said that two months before, his home had been destroyed by fire. He and his wife and their two children took refuge in a wretched dugout. There the two children sickened and died. In despair, the parents determined to return to their former home in Illinois and the mother begged that the bodies of her children might not be left behind. They were almost petrified by frosts and were easily transported. The farmer put them in his wagon, harnessed his ponies and set out on the long journey across the prairie. They passed through Delphos and were half way to the Missouri River when the wife was taken sick from exposure. Being far from any town no doctor could be summoned, and that evening the mother died. The husband wrapped her body in a blanket and continued his sorrowful journey with his beloved dead in the wagon behind him. It may be hoped he has faith in God, otherwise his lot is dark indeed. But if he believes in Christ he has the assurance that has brought comfort to many a mourner.

For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him (1. Thess. 4: 14).

Finding the Tomb of Osiris.

An astonishing report comes from Abydos in Egypt, where M. Amelineau the French Egyptologist has been carrying on excavations. He writes that he has discovered a wonderful tomb which he believes to be that of Osiris. He had observed the frequency with which the Egyptian records referred to the tomb, which they designated as "the staircase of the great God." He read also, in the histories of the epoch of Osiris that the officials earnestly sought to be buried near to Osiris. These references convinced M. Amelineau that Osiris was a real person, who actually lived at Abydos with his wife Isis and their son Horus, and that he was not a mere myth. He made diligent search for the tomb, and recently uncovered a tomb which apparently fulfils the descriptions. "It was rectangular in shape," says the explorer, "and appeared to resemble a dwelling. It contained fourteen rooms and in the centre where there were five rooms on the northern, five on the southern, and four on the eastern side, there was the staircase for which during many months he had been looking. Within lay a granite monolith in the shape of a great bed decorated with the head and legs of a lion. On this bed was lying a mummy bearing what is known as the white crown, holding in his hands, which came out of the case, a flagellum and a pastoral cane. Near the head were two hawks, and two more were at the feet. The dead was designated by the inscription: "Osiris, the Good Being." The hawks were labelled: "Horus, avenger of his father," and the goddess Isis is also designated by her name. There were doubtless, originally, records in the tomb by which it might have been identified with certainty, but they have all been destroyed by a fire which at some remote period raged there. M. Amelineau deplores their loss, but as he says, "what is burned can never be restored." If this is indeed the tomb of Osiris it furnishes a literal fulfilment of the prophecy:

The houses of the gods of the Egyptians shall be burn with fire (Jer. 43: 13).

The Deer's Refuge.

An appeal was made a few days ago to the game protector of Sullivan county, N. Y., by a farmer near Newburgh. It is a violation of the law for a private person to have a wild deer in his possession at this time of the year, so the farmer felt it his duty to explain to the game protector the presence of a deer in his barn. He said that one day in the previous week he was sitting at supper when he heard a noise in his yard and saw a deer's head at his window. The deer was rubbing its nose against the glass as if asking to be taken in. He went out and examined the animal, who made no attempt to run away. It had evidently been chased by dogs, and had been shot in the leg and the back. He was sorry for the poor beast, and went over to his barn and opened the door for it. The deer followed him like a dog, and seemed quite content in the barn. He had fed it and had conceived a strong affection for it, which the deer seemed to reciprocate. It had many opportunities of making its escape, but it evinced no inclination to run away. He could not bear to turn the creature out to be worried by the dogs, so concluded to tell the circumstances to the game protector. The latter considered there had been no infraction of the law, so the deer will remain for the present in the refuge of its choice. It is strange that the deer should have displayed such confidence in a human being. Men with more sense and better reason for trusting in their God often cannot be induced to fly from the dangers and trials of life to the refuge he offers them. Comparatively few feel as the psalmist did:

As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God (Ps. 42: 1).

An Admiral Out-ranked.

An interesting story is told of Rear Admiral Thomas O. Selfridge, who has just retired from the United States Navy, having reached the age limit. It appears that a short time ago the Admiral, with a number of his officers, was in Paris, and was invited to attend a dinner, to be given by the Legion of Honor to the officers of the American Army and Navy who were in the city at the time. The Admiral took great pleasure in accepting because he was a member of the Legion of Honor. Some time previously, while on a cruise in the Mediterranean, he had rendered a service to a French vessel, which had been brought to the notice of the French Government, and the red ribbon and a silver medal had been conferred upon him. The decoration was furbished up for the Admiral to wear at the dinner, and he congratulated himself on the pleasure it would give his hosts to recognize it on his breast. Among the officers who were to accompany him was one of his lieutenants. At the presentation to the President and at the other ceremonies the Admiral received the courtesies due to his rank and the other American officers after him according to their rank. But when the crowning ceremony of the dinner of the Legion of Honor occurred, the Admiral was astonished to see an officer summon the Lieutenant to the higher table among the dignitaries. Then it was noticed that the Lieutenant was wearing the ribbon of the Legion of Honor and the gold medal, that indicates an officer of that body, which had been conferred upon him for distinguished service. The American officers could scarcely believe their eyes as they saw the Admiral with his two stars out-ranked by the two silver bars of a lieutenant, but the explanation was simply that the dinner being purely a Legion of Honor affair, the Lieutenant's higher rank in that body had to be recognized without regard to his relative standing in the American Navy. It will, our Lord declared, be so at the marriage supper of the Lamb. There will be surprise then when some who are highly esteemed in this world have to yield precedence to those who have been despised here, but are high in the kingdom of God.

Verily I say unto you that the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you (Matt. 21: 31).

Food Cargoes for Starving Cuba.

Government Details a Naval Vessel to Carry Our Gifts to the Suffering Multitudes.

A Great Nation's Sympathy With Suffering—Dr. Klopsch Now in Havana, and May Accompany the Vessel to Matanzas—The Crisis of the Famine at Hand—Let All Now Help With a Will to Save Cuba's Starving and Dying People.

IF THE grateful prayers of those thousands of starving Cuban peasants—fathers, mothers and little children—who have been literally saved from death by the Christ-like sympathy and generosity of the readers of this journal and others, could be wafted to the ears of those who have so nobly aided the relief work, they would feel overwhelming repaid for all their sacrifice and self-denial. It is indeed literally true that thousands have been almost "snatched from the grave" by the opportune arrival of the food that came to them as though like the manna to the children of Israel, it had come direct from heaven. But there is a very large Cuban territory as yet totally untouched by the relief work, and where the horrors of famine and disease are raging unchecked.

A United States naval vessel, the dispatch boat, Fern, lately at Havana, has been designated by the national government to aid in this part of the relief work. Unless a change in the programme should be deemed advisable, the Fern will load at Key West with supplies, purchased with money contributed to the Relief Fund, and will sail from that port to points on the Cuban coast where the suffering is known to be exceedingly severe, and where the population is dying off by hundreds daily of sheer starvation. Dr. Klopsch, who has been in Cuba during the past week, directing the extension of the relief work from Havana to many points in the interior, has been invited to accompany the vessel on her mission of peace and succor, as the guest of the government and the representative of the Relief Fund, in whose administration the whole nation is interested. The Fern will go to Matanzas, where the famine situation is known to be critical, and where her load of provisions and medicines will be eagerly welcomed by the suffering population. She may also go to Sagua la Grande, a considerable distance farther down the coast, where similar conditions prevail. It is expected by these means, and through this most generous co-operation by the government, that many thousands of the starving may be reached.

This is the second instance within a year, of the United States Government extending in this signal manner, its hearty and benevolent aid to a deserving work begun and carried forward by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. To those thousands of our friends who have "put their hands to the plough" to save dying Cuba, this news will be most welcome, since it seals their work with the highest stamp of approval a nation can give. Yet we know that those who have entered on this work freely and voluntarily, have done so solely for his sake, whose whole earthly life was spent in works of kindness and mercy, in feeding the hungry and healing the sick. It is in this spirit of brotherly love and devoted self sacrifice that they have taken the cause of the poor, neglected dying Cuban peasants to their hearts, and are now trying to save the remnant from the sad fate of the 400,- [illegible] who have already perished for lack of food.

All the letters received from Cuba during the week indicate that the real crisis is at hand in the [illegible] provinces. Soon the rainy season will set in, when it may be difficult to distribute relief supplies. In the short time that remains, therefore, it is of the most vital importance that the relief work be pushed with the greatest energy. Gen. Lee, Miss Barton and Dr. Klopsch all agree that supplies in greatly increased quantities are urgently needed to enable the distributors to maintain a reserve stock of food in the neediest districts, both along the coast [illegible] of Havana and in the interior. We would therefore urge our friends to send in their contributions to the fund promptly, that these precious lives might be saved and suffering relieved. Every hour and every day of delay may cost a human life.

United States Senator Proctor, now in Havana, has just returned from a visit to Artemisa, in Pinar del Rio Province. He declares that the suffering there is worse even than at Matanzas, which he has also visited. Another American, Col. Parker, writes that the pitiable story of the reconcentrados' sufferings and all the horrors of famine and death are shocking. Col. Pratt, of Wyoming, gives this picture:

"I have seen men and women die, while we watched the bodies of the victims bursting with bloat, or leaving only skeletons on the bare floor to speak of what was once a human form. Some who died were children as naked as the day they were born. At Matanzas we saw a babe with the last convulsive gasp twine its fingers in the thin hair of a mother who had been dead over an hour."

United States Consul Hyatt writes from Santiago de Cuba:

I desire to make a brief report of the first four days' work in distributing the food and medicine, which I received in due time by steamship Niagara. As stated in a previous communication, a committee of thirty of the best ladies of the place divided the city into fifteen districts. The first day's rations were issued to 379; second day, 577; third day, 1,083; fourth day, 1,027; total, 3,066. Each ration being for seven days makes a total of 21,462 for one day. As near as I can judge, only about one-half of the people who need help have yet received their first rations, and the codfish and beans will give out before we get around the first time. I have given moderate quantities to eleemosynary institutions of the city, and sent some to the mining and other towns near by. We are trying to make both food and medicine do the most good possible. It takes six or eight policemen to keep the crowds in order.

Smallpox has again broken out, and I have requested Surgeon-General Wyman to send to you for me a quantity of vaccine virus. Should it not come to hand I will thank you to furnish me with a moderate quantity.

The hospital for concentrado children near Havana has been completed, and many improvements have been made in the other hospitals. Miss Clara Barton called on the Mayor of the city and was by him assured that the society's work was much appreciated. While the sick are many, the starving are far more numerous, and the distribution of food is keeping many from dying in the streets.

Mr. Walter Barker, United States Consul at Sagua La Grande, Cuba, writes:

I have certificates of the Mayors of the three cities and towns in this large district [illegible] to show there are at the present time over 50,000 persons starving. I cannot believe your American people are uncharitable. They just do not realize the destitution and desolation of the people in this island."

During the week Miss Barton has been so busily engaged in the relief work that little time has been left for letter writing. She has already won the love and admiration of the poor reconcentrados and wherever she goes she is now hailed as the "good woman who came from the Christian people of America" to save the starving Cubans. At different towns delegations of peasant women have visited her and weeping and sobbing, have poured out their thanks and invoked blessing upon those who sent her with food and medicine to their afflicted people. Here, as in nearly all great calamities, women and children are the greatest sufferers, and to their needs Miss Barton and her corps of aids devote special attention. With the means furnished from the Relief Fund they have already been instrumental in saving a very large number who otherwise would have miserably perished.

A TRAMWAY AT SANTIAGO DE CUBA.

In order to afford the women of Christian America an opportunity to aid in a special manner their destitute sisters in Cuba (Miss Barton having reported that thousands of the peasant women and children in the famine districts are in rags), the CHRISTIAN HERALD has invited the active co-operation of the King's Daughters and the council of that organization has opened a Cuban Relief Sewing Circle, with headquarters at No. 17 Astor Place, New York City. Here, in a large store fronting on two streets, a number of cutters and sewing machine operators are now employed manufacturing garments for the Cuban peasants. These are shipped by the Central Cuban Relief Committee to Havana direct and will be distributed through the regular Relief Fund channels.

Gifts of new lightweight cloth, linen cotton, calico, muslin, flannel and other materials suitable for making into garments for women and children will be welcomed by the King's Daughters at the address mentioned.

A letter from Miss Barton to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, received only a days ago, says:

"That great den of suffering, the 'Fossos,' is coming into comfort, and have the best of returns from Jur We yesterday sent calico to them, their women make hos gowns for sick, and a of dresses the paleface tle girls in Tell THE CH TIAN HER sewing girls will never their finger a more needy a more gra cause. —CL BARTON.

Many h dreds of le are receive quiring ab the relief in Cuba, an expressing heartiest s pathy with sufferers. Churches, l ues, church cieties, Sun schools and er organizat enthusiastic vie with each other in the work of sa life in Cuba and in forwarding their co butions for that purpose. The Chris Endeavor Society of the Presbyte Church, of Hempstead, L. I., N. raised $21.25, which was sent to the F and their gift will doubtless be the m of rescuing several destitute families starvation.

Similar gifts are coming in from quarters by every mail, each accompa by earnest prayers in behalf of the f ferers. A notable instance of wh band of earnest Christian people accomplish is found in the little tow Orange, N. J., where the united Su Schools and churches have already ra $565.55 for the relief fund.

Following are a few samples of dreds of similar letters received daily

Philafricans at Lincoln.

Cheering News of the Colony for Released Slaves in Central Africa.

A LETTER just received from Heli Chatelain contains encouraging reports of the position and prospects of the colony that he and his fellow-workers went out to establish for the reception of the liberated slaves. It is very gratifying that at last there is hope that Christian men and women will soon be prepared to take charge of the poor creatures who are delivered from their ruthless captors and saved from the horrible fate of being sold into slavery. When the civilized nations having forces in Africa perceive that there is a home and kindly care awaiting any of these victims of the slave raiders who can be set free, they will have more encouragement to forcibly intercept the caravans and suppress the horrible traffic.

As our readers know from Mr. Chatelain's letter, published in this journal on Feb. 9, the site near Caconda was finally selected for the first colony. It is about thirty miles west of Caconda, on the watershed of the Cubale and Catumbela rivers. Mr. Chatelain has given it the name of Lincoln, in memory of the martyred President. He reports that a longer acquaintance with the site and the people of the neighborhood, confirm his first opinion that the party has selected wisely in making choice of this site. The climate is favorable, and so far as can be learned, the thermometer seldom goes above 80 degrees. It has an altitude of about 5,500 feet and has in the Kukala river an abundant supply of water, sufficient not only for irrigation, but for operating a small mill. There will be no difficulty in raising peaches, berries, wheat, beans, corn, tomatoes, and cabbage.

The people around the settlement belong to the tribe known as Caluquembes. They speak the Umbundu dialect, which bears about the same relation to the Kimbundu as Italian does to Spanish. Mr. Chatelain is a master of the Kimbundu, and during his former residence in Africa some years ago, prepared a grammar and a reader of it. The missionaries of the American Board have prepared an Umbundu grammar, and with its aid Mr. Chatelain already makes himself understood without an interpreter. He believes that in a few months he will be able to speak the language without hesitation and can give the natives some Gospel talks. They are at present somewhat timid of white men, having had a disagreeable experience with the Boers and the Portuguese, but they are gradually finding out that they have nothing to fear from their new neighbors.

The party was still living in tents when Mr. Chatelain wrote, but they had already begun the erection of temporary houses, constructed of tree-trunks for walls, covered with mud on the outside and protected within by Indian mats. These will be roofed with thatch in lieu of the fire-proof of tiles, which Mr. Chatelain hopes his friends in the United States will soon be able to send him. He also wants badly an American emigrant wagon and some plows and agricultural implements, which are sold there at ruinous prices.

It is gratifying to learn that the natives around the settlement are willing to trade for cloth, which is a decided advantage. Most of the tribes refuse to part with their chickens and produce for anything except rum. Mr. Chatelain congratulates himself that he is among a people less under the rum curse than any of the tribes in that district. They are, however, among the least civilized tribes of the region, so that the party has a virgin sphere of labor. They expect to have a number of children to teach as soon as they are ready to receive them. All the party are in good health, and are working hard to get the settlement into such order as will enable them to give hospitality to their first convoy of liberated slaves. It will be a great pleasure to send these brave workers the implements they need, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will gladly receive donations toward purchasing them. It will cheer these self-sacrificing men and women in their voluntary exile, to find that in the home-land their Christian friends do not forget them, but are praying for them and promptly and cheerfully ministering to their needs.

"I WILL GUIDE THEE."

THE path was rough and painful, too,
The way I could not see,
When lo, I heard a voice which said,
"My child, 'Come unto me.'"

So then my heart fresh courage took,
I felt no anxious fear,
For when in doubt or conflict bold
I knew the Lord was near.

And now, at length, when almost home,
My pain and trouble o'er,
A sweet peace fills my heart and soul,
Unfelt by me before.

MISSIONARY LEADINGS.

Providential Circumstances Indicating Spheres of Labor (Acts 16: 6-14).

The perplexity which disturbs the modern Christian worker in deciding on the field he will try to occupy for Christ, has evidently its counterpart in the lives of the Apostles. We read of their plans being thwarted and of their "assaying" to go to a place and being prevented; and again of their being forbidden to preach in a district which seemed to them at the time a promising field. There seemed to be no direct supernatural command for them to go to Macedonia, and their going was due merely to an inference from a dream that Paul had. Luke's phrase, "assuredly gathering," shows that there were times in their work, when they were left to their own reasoning and were not consciously directed. It looks as if they had some difficulty, such as the modern worker often experiences, in learning what course God wished them to take.

Taking all the consolation that this suggestion affords, and realizing that our own perplexity is not a new thing, implying that God does not take the interest in our work that he took in the labors of these devoted men, we are nevertheless in duty bound to look, as they evidently did, for indications of the divine will. There should be a sensitiveness to direction, a readiness to obey and a cheerfulness in defeat which show a docile spirit. Whether the work be the teaching of a class in a Sunday school, or the conduct of a mission, or going as a missionary to a foreign land, the call is to be considered in the light of our circumstances. There should be no frantic appeals, no depression in failure, but the calm acceptance of difficulties as indications of the divine will. If we are ready for our Master's service and he wishes to use us, he will open the way. The Holy Spirit which guided Paul is still with the followers of Christ and the directions which guided him will be given to the willing worker.

COMPREHENSIVE PRAYER.

An Ideal Christian Character Produced by Divine Power (Eph. 3: 14-21).

A summary of the most desirable things in the Christian life and character is presented in the Apostle's prayer for his converts. He tells them what he asks God to impart to them and what he wishes them to attain. The young convert is often puzzled about this matter. He does not know what his new-found faith is to do in his life. These petitions show the goal he is to try to reach. The character they outline is the Apostle's ideal. The inner man is to be strengthened. It is to have its proper place in the conduct of life. The appetites and desires of the body are to be subordinated. This inner man, so weak in many of us, as that it cannot enforce its will and yields reluctant obedience to the lower instincts, is to have its power reinforced, so that it rules and controls the whole man, and this can be done through the Holy Spirit. Then, there is to be such faith in Christ that he actually dwells in the heart. He is no mere visitor, welcomed on the Sunday, but crowded out on other days by worldly thoughts and occupations. Faith in him is to be so strong that in the very centre of being he is enthroned, and we yield our lives to him to do with them as he will. Then, love is to be the foundation and basis of action. The roots of our being are to draw life and energy from love, which will sustain us and enable us to bear fruit in the home and in the world, doing deeds of service. Finally, to gain a knowledge of a world that is boundless, reaching to infinite heights and depths, learning ever more and more of Christ's love, so that we may be filled with the fulness of God. That is the picture of the ideal Christian, and if any feel that it is beyond attainment, he is commended to him who is able to do more than we can ask or think. Not of ourselves, nor by ourselves, could we hope for such results, but all is possible to one in whom is that power.

SERMONS WORTH READING

HELPFUL DISCOURSES FOR THE PEOPLE

ENDURANCE.

A Sermon Preached by Rev. Albert J. Lyman, D.D., in the South Congregational Church, Brooklyn. Text Hebrew 11 : 27. For he endured as seeing Him who is invisible.

PERHAPS the finest form of courage is what we know as endurance. It is not the most showy kind, but really the bravest: ten men can charge a battery for one man who can stand out in the open under fire and grimly hold on. And on the other hand, three-fourths of the actual demand for courage in practical life is the demand for just this kind of courage, whose heart is endurance and tenacity. What we need is endurance more than dash or daring. We need what Lord Wellington called the "five o'clock in the morning courage."

Now this at once most difficult and most needful kind of courage is in the text associated with something seen by the mind and only by the mind. The courage of onset can be stimulated by the visible; the courage of endurance is maintained only by the invisible. Not otherwise yonder mother endures in the sick-room, never giving up in her watch by her sick child, and why?—because she sees the invisible, the picture of her child restored and well; not otherwise the patriot endures, as strong as death and stronger, holding on in the midst of desperate defeat, and why?—because he sees the invisible picture of his ransomed country. Fortitude, in other words, is the child of faith.

Secondly. But more than this, it is not only the vision of something invisible that creates enduring courage, but the vision of some one who is invisible that gives this courage, "as seeing him who is invisible." It is the sight of a face—the sight of God's face—the sense that personal truth and law and love control the world. Oh, the long waits of life when hope grows cold, but I can stand the long wait if I can see God on the horizon and that there he is marshalling his armies of final deliverance. Almost every feature of modern life is more and more keyed to a demand upon the future? "Dealing in futures" is the business man's technical phrase for a special class of transactions, but the phrase entitles a feature which enters more or less into all the texture of modern life. More and more our life is assuming those forms of discounting the future which call for and reward the tenacious kind of courage. It is so in education: it is so in the home life, it is so in public affairs—persistency wins—modern life consists in sowing seeds which are to ripen, not to-day nor to-morrow, but the day after to-morrow.

Now how to acquire and cultivate this kind of courage? There is but one way, and that is by training ourselves to see the things that are invisible, and especially him who is invisible: but, how can I train myself to see God? My first answer will take you quite off the religious track. The first art to train our eyes to see God, is to mend our eyes of the invisible part of the natural world around us. There is yonder blue space in the sky—utter vacancy. It seems best even upon it the great stars, and a thousand shining orbs flame out like gems in a great mine. You understand the utterance—if God's lamps are shining there where my unaided eye cannot see them, perhaps his other lamps are shining in the apparently vacant space in the firmament of my life. Then take the microscope, for in a speck of moss—under the lens the filaments expand into plains, the plains into trees, and so it were, forests full of living things of structure and organism—a whole world of order and beauty in the little bit of moss. You understand the inference, if here is the touch and work of a higher power, that higher power may also watch and work as I want fully in the forgotten fragments of my life. This is the first way to realize the invisible.

Second. Think of the invisible force of personal experience—here we have no microscope—but we have one instrument of comparison, and that is the study of biography. A biography is a microscope through which we look through another life into our own, and by that means resolve the nebulæ of ourselves. To realize other men's lives is to realize the unseen part of our own life.

And then, once more, there is still one other way to realize the invisible God and so derive the enduring courage—it is by joining both these methods—by going to the summit of nature and to the perfection of biography in one, namely to study the historical Jesus. To get at the mind of Jesus is our watchword for the path to God, to the truth and reality of things. So, for example, let us read the Gospel of Matthew swiftly, right through at one sitting: see the wonderful story unfold the baptism, the temptation, the sweetly swift years, the blind receiving the light, the cripple at the gate healed, Jesus in the boat asleep and then the shadows gathering, the Bethany home, the mob, the cries, that dreary, nameless Thursday night, and then the Friday when all, as men say, and as God did not say—was "over." Read it all, realize it all—to realize that is to realize God—for God was with Jesus, and the story of Jesus is partly a story of God with you. For if God could be with Jesus, such a God and such a kind of God as Jesus was thinking about and told us of, must he not be with us, and how can a man realize that, and not be steady and enduring as if "seeing" the kind face that is invisible.

I used to think that I got nearest to God in the rude shelter of the forest trees, by some remote lake shore or on the mountain crags, in the voiceless and yet million-voiced wilderness, where no one came but the quick, shy forest bird and the furry-footed woodland rovers, where resting all alone at sunset I could hear the rustling of the innumerable leaves, and accompanying it a kind of murmur of God's voice, but of late years I have seemed to hear that voice just as clearly in the midst of throngs of men. Yonder crowd of a hundred men—what are they? Men, that a hundred mothers would die for and that God watches out of heaven. It is no far cry from the watched to the watcher. Therefore I gently, steadily call aloud to my brethren and say, endure, "as seeing him who is invisible." Right where the slow wait is, right where the long, unescapable pressure is, right where bravery can be nothing but tenacity—right there try to realize God, and you also shall be brave, and yet again and to the end—brave.

Hawaii's Population.

According to the latest census, the population of the Hawaiian Islands is 109,000, of which 46,000 are Asiatics who have no vote. Twenty-four per cent. of the enfranchised nationalities, and more than twelve per cent. of the entire population, attended school in 1896, the whole number of pupils being 14,023. The Hawaiian language is no longer taught in the public schools. English is made compulsory in all schools, private as well as public. The text books employed are almost all American. No other country in the world devotes so large a proportion of its public revenues to public education.

'Just as Good as Scott's and we sell it much cheaper," is a statement sometimes made by the druggist when Scott's Emulsion is called for. This shows that the druggists themselves regard of Cod-Liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda as the standard, and the purchaser who desires to procure the "standard" because he knows it has been of untold benefit, should not for one instant think of taking the risk of using some untried preparation. The substitution of something said to be "just as good" for a standard preparation twenty-five years on the market, should not be permitted by the intelligent purchaser.

Scott's Emulsion

Be sure you get SCOTT'S Emulsion. See that the man and fish are on the wrapper

The Bible in Many Tongues.

An Interesting Exhibit at the Students' Volunteer Convention at Cleveland, O., by the American Bible Society.

A MOST interesting exhibit of translations of the Bible was made in Cleveland, Ohio, during the Students' Volunteer Convention, which held sessions there from Feb. 23 to 27. These translations have been made by American missionaries and published at the expense of the American Bible Society. The collection of books exhibited at Denver has impressed upon the minds of students the long and painstaking labor of the devoted servants of Christ who are seeking to evangelize the world by giving the printed Bible to every man in his mother tongue. Among this collection may be mentioned as translations of peculiar interest: a Bible for the Gilbert Islanders; Biblical books in the languages of Hawaii, Keesaie, Mortlock, Marshall Islands, and Ascension Island; the Dakotah Bible, translated by Dr. S. R. Riggs and Rev. Thomas P. Williamson; Testaments in Muskokee, Ojibwa, and Choctaw; the Spanish Bible, by Rev. H. Pratt, the result of years of labor, and of immeasurable blessing to the millions of Spanish-speaking residents of Mexico, Central and South America; versions for Africa, among which appear specimen translations in Zulu, Sheetswa, Dikele, Benga, Mponwe, and Bulu; a complete Japanese Bible, the work of three representative Americans, Dr. J. C. Hepburn, Dr. R. S. Brown, and Dr. D. C. Greene; a Bible in the Mandarin Colloquial of China, than which no book is at present in greater demand; the entire Bible in Arabic, the sacred language of Mohammedan millions; Syriac versions for Nestorian, Bulgarian, Armenian, Turkish, Tamil, Telegu, Siamese, Burmese, and many others. The first of these enumerated—the Bible for the Gilbert Islanders—was the labor of a lifetime. The man who gave his life to this task was Dr. Hiram Bingham, D.D. When he went to Micronesia in 1857, the language, which had never been reduced to writing, had of course no grammar, dictionary, or alphabet. Besides the Mandarin Colloquial Bible, the work of Bishop Schereschewsky, Dr. Blodget and Dr. Martin, there is the version in Chinese Classical, prepared by Bridgman and Culbertson, extensively used by the cultivated Chinese; and the Canton Colloquial, Easy Wenli, and other various dialectical versions in which it has been found necessary to supply the Chinese with such Scriptures as can be understood in different provinces of that vast, ancient empire of the East.

More than two hundred new versions of the Bible, or parts of the Bible, have been made during the last sixty years, and the missionary of to-day is furnished with an equipment which puts him at an untold advantage as compared with the pioneer evangelists who began work in India and Burmah nearly ninety years ago. Still there is much to be done before the world will know the whole story of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

SPECIMENS OF TRANSLATIONS MADE BY AMERICAN MISSIONARIES.

The Birds and Springtime.

A reader in Brooks Grove, N. Y., sends us this dainty little appeal in behalf of the birds, which, with spring so near, is peculiarly timely:

"To one who loves birds, it seems passing strange that it has become necessary to make appeals in their behalf, to save their bright lives from being wantonly destroyed. Yet such is the deplorable fact. So many men and boys strolling about with guns, who do not hesitate to take aim at the first bird they may see perched on a bough, trilling a song of joy—the song is stilled, the bright eyes are closed: perhaps a nest full of little ones left to die. Women who would hesitate to kill the bird will yet encourage their destruction by demanding the bright plumage to wear on their hats. Would you not rather listen to the bird-songs and see the birds flitting about in their joy? I am sure if we were a little more thoughtful about it we would never again wear a bird's plumage, and we would also, by our example and influence, do what we could to save the birds. Who can estimate the soul-destroying influence of cruelty upon young or old. He who notes even the sparrow's fall will surely visit retribution upon those who wantonly kill the birds. What Miss Spencer says in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of Feb. 9 is too true. Now that the time is so near, when we will be watching for the coming of bluebird and robin, let there be a united effort on the part of all friends of the birds to protect them."

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Answers to Prayer—Jealousy—Carpets—Sympathy for Cuba—Simple Entertainments.

A DEAR friend writes that she is a little in doubt as to the limitation of prayer. Are we always to expect an answer when we pray? Certainly. God answers our prayers; answers every prayer we make; not always, however in the literal way we expect. If one of your children asked you to give him a loaded revolver to play with, because it was bright and shining and he enjoyed using such a toy, you would not think for an instant of granting that request because you love your child too well to put him in danger; so God sometimes sees that we are asking that which it is not best for us to have, and either refuses us in that thing or sends the answer in some different form from that which we thought best. Prayer is not like presenting a check at a bank where you have money. You cannot be sure that God will think best to give you just exactly the thing you are asking at the moment; but you may be sure that he is giving you the very thing which is best for you to have; that no prayer is lost and that you will be helped just where you require help. What we want, is it not, is to know and to do the will of God. We do not wish, surely, anything that is not according to God's will. Our Lord said, "I will guide thee with mine eye." We should consult God every day about every step. We must be willing for ourselves and for our dear children to have and to do the thing God sees is best for us. The phrase "vain repetitions," of which this friend speaks, does not apply to our repeating the same thing over and over; but rather to a parrot-like way of saying words in a thoughtless manner, meaning nothing by them. Many of us insult God by heedless and thoughtless prayers, which are like the babbling of a child at its play, or like the prayers which the heathen make to their idol gods.

A constant reader inquires whether it is a sin to be jealous. Jealousy shows a very unhappy state of mind; and, ordinarily and broadly, to indulge in such a disposition is sinful. It does not make the jealous person happy, and it makes every one else around miserable.

My Dear Cynthia—I take great interest in hearing about your rugs and rag carpets. To my mind, nothing is prettier than the home-made rugs which farmer's wives and daughters make in their odd moments during the winter, and I think a rag carpet a very beautiful and useful floor-covering. I have myself taken great pleasure in sewing together rags for carpets, and the effect when they are prettily blended is quite equal to that of a more expensive carpet woven according to different designs. Very pretty portieres are made of silk and ribbon stitched as for rag carpets and woven in a loom. Do not despise these simple things which you can make yourself.

I am glad that a California correspondent is stirred up to give some help to the poor sufferers in Cuba. The conditions of affairs there are simply heartrending. I wonder that we can sleep in our beds at night, or sit down to our tables in peace, when we see such pictures as the CHRISTIAN HERALD has lately shown us, of emaciated beings who have been reduced to skin and bone by starvation. Famine is at our doors in all its ghastly horror. When we think of the poor little children who, through no fault of theirs have been martyred, when we read of all the outrages which have disgraced humanity and shocked the civilized world in the last few months, surely every one of us must long to bear a hand in this crusade which the CHRISTIAN HERALD has started. Even if one can do little, a great many littles joined together make a mighty stream. No one should hesitate to send a mite; those who can contribute should do so. God grant the day may soon come when beautiful Cuba may be free and when those who have suffered there may forget their sufferings in happier days. Clara Barton, a great saint and one of the most heroic women of our time, whose name is known all around the world, who has carried the Red Cross banner, East, West, North and South, has gone to the relief of Cuba, and we all have an interest there and will wait longingly to hear her reports. Even a child may do something to help at this time. Let us cease to be selfish and hard and try what we can do to make that corner of the world less an Inferno and more peaceful and happy than it now is.

With regard to simple entertainments, it is always best to have them rather informal. If a lady wishes to invite a few friends to spend the evening with her, the best plan is to write informal notes to those whom she would like to have at her house. A note might be written in this way:

20 OAK AVE., NEWTOWN, N. Y.

My Dear Mrs. Brown:—My sister is spending a few weeks with me and it would give me great pleasure to have you and Mr. Brown meet her. Will you spend next Thursday evening very informally with us? Very sincerely yours,

ALICE MARGARET SMITH.

A more formal method would be to invite your friends to a little tea at which they can meet your sister. Should you do this, you can simply enclose your visiting card, writing at the top To meet Miss Emily Judson, and in the corner of your card, Thursday afternoon from four to six. If you desire to be still more formal, you may if you wish, send your invitation thus:

MR. AND MRS. ROBINSON SMITH,
At Home, Thursday evening from seven to ten.

Fagot party or whatever other pleasure you choose, written in the corner of your note. Written invitations are correct in all circumstances except for very large and formal occasions.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Character Sketches.*

BY REV. JOHN WATSON.

DURNBRAE and Jean saw all their gear, save the household furniture, set out for sale. She had resolved to be brave for his sake, but every object in the field made its own appeal to her heart. What one read in the auctioneer's catalogue was a bare list of animals and implements, the scant plenishing of a highland farm. Jean saw everything in a golden mist of love. It was a perfectly preposterous old dog-cart, that ought to have been broken up long ago, but how often she had gone in it to Muirtown on market days with John, and on the last journey he had wrapped her up as tenderly as when she was a young bride.

But not even Hillocks, with all his blandishments, could wile them within doors that evening. John Ross saw him and her shading her eyes at the garden gate, and wearying for the sight of his head above the hill, and already David Baxter seemed to hear his father's voice: "God bless ye, laddie; welcome hame, ye're weel dune." For the choice reward of a true man's work is not the applause of the street, which comes and goes, but the pride of them that love him. The Lilies of Auld Lang Syne.

They are unworthy of their profession who join in the Philistine outcry against theology, and allow it to be spoken of as something not worthy of serious study. If it be praiseworthy to classify beetles and specialties among the coleoptera speak solemnly of their subject, it may be allowed for one science to reason regarding God and the soul. The Cure of Souls.

He was a head to every widow and a father to the orphans, and a friend of all lonely, discouraged unsuccessful souls. Three miles away people did not know his name, but his own congregation regarded another, and in the Lord's presence it was well known, it was often mentioned; when he laid down his trust, and arrived on the other side, many whom he had fed and guided, and restored and comforted, that he saw them through the gates, were waiting to receive their shepherd-minister, and as they stood around him before the Lord, he, of all men, could say without shame: "Behold, Lord, thine undershepherd and the flock thou didst give me." The Cure of Souls.

He cleaned and trimmed with anxious hand a lamp that was kept for show, and had never been used. Then he selected from his books Edwards' "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God," and "Coles on the Divine Sovereignty," and on them he laid the large family Bible, out of which Flora's name had been blotted. This was the stand on which he set the lamp in the window, and every night till Flora returned, its light shone down the steep path that ascended to her home, like the Divine Love from the open door of our Father's House. Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush.

How can one conquer sin? How can one come to perfection? How can one have fellowship with God? How can one save the world? And to a hundred questions of this kind Jesus has one answer: "Love the man next you." It is the poetry of idealism; it is quite beyond your criticism as a counsel of perfection. The Mind of the Master.

*From the Ian Maclaren Year-Book, a volume of short selections for each day in the year taken from the various works of Rev. John Watson, popularly known as "Ian Maclaren." Price $1.25; Publishers, Dodd, Mead & Co., 151 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Pandita Ramabai's Visit.

How "The Christian Herald" Readers Helped a Noble Philanthropist to do a Grand Work of Rescue.

THE Christian Brahmin lady from India, whose work for the widows and orphans of her country has often been mentioned in this journal, arrived recently in the United States and paid a visit to the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Pandita Ramabai has, as our readers are aware, received help in her work from our India Famine Fund, and her first business was to express her thanks and ask that the readers of this journal be assured that their gifts had enabled her to save many children and desolate young girls from death, or from a fate worse than death. She has now about three hundred of these waifs at her house at Khedgaon, who are being fed, clothed and educated under native Christian teachers, Miss Minnie F. Abrams having the oversight of the work. Some of the teachers come from her institution at Poona, where for ten years past she has been educating girl widows, whose lot in India is a singularly unhappy one. Ramabai explained the effort she had been making and said that during the ten years there had gone from her school seven girls to become assistants of missionaries; fourteen, who are teachers and seven who are now skilful trained nurses. When it is remembered that these girls would have been half-starved, overworked, often brutally beaten, dependants on the charity of the families of their dead husbands, if Ramabai had not taught them and fitted them to earn an honorable livelihood, the value of her work can be realized.

The institution at Khedgaon is altogether separate from the work at Poona. The latter has been supported by the Ramabai circles in this country, but for the former no provision has been made. The inmates were collected by Ramabai herself during the famine. In the great famine of 1877 she was a sufferer and she saw her father and mother die of hunger. She narrowly escaped the same fate, so that when the recent calamity fell upon the country, she had the fellow-feeling with her country-women which comes of bitter experience. Although she had only such means as were given her by compassionate people here and in England, she boldly undertook the charge of three hundred. When asked how she dare take upon herself so heavy a burden and where she expected to get the means to support so large a family, she significantly pointed heavenward and said: "He has never failed me yet."

When Ramabai left India, on her mission to this country, she was able to leave sufficient funds to support her family of orphans for just three weeks, and she admitted that beyond that period she had no provision. So remarkable an example of unfaltering faith is rarely seen. It was a relief to her mind when Dr. Klopsch promised her that out of the balance still remaining of the Famine Fund, he would undertake the charge of one hundred of her orphans for one year, and handed her a check of $1,125 on account. Ramabai hopes that she may find other friends here who will further assist her and who will take permanent interest in her work, and pray for God's blessing on her labors.

Some of our friends who contributed to the India Famine Relief Fund are entitled to an apology for the delay in acknowledging their gifts in these columns. The postponement was due to the urgent and unexpected necessity of devoting space to the work in Cuba. When the pressure on our columns of these reports is relieved the deferred list of contributions will be published with the balance sheet showing how the entire amount contributed was expended.

La Grippe Cured

This modern malady has become dreaded not more for its direct fatality than for the weakness of body and mind it leaves behind it. Prolonged debility, permanent prostration, melancholy, and suicide mark the path of La Grippe. For this disease there is no remedy superior to Dr. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

"My wife and five children were taken with la grippe, while the disease was so widely prevalent. I treated them with Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and before using quite two bottles my family was restored to health. I know of several obstinate cases of the same complaint which were also cured by this remedy. I consider it the best to be had for all throat and lung disorders."—J. PARMINTER, Paulette, Miss.

GOD'S PROMISES.

Temple Song in Solo and Refrain. Ps. 91: 1-16.

Many attempts have been made to solve the grammatical difficulties of the beautiful psalm associated with the topic. The sense requires us to understand the "He" of the first verse, the "I" of e second, and the "thee" of the third as erring to the same person—the person io "sits in the secret place." The con- sion of the pronouns has puzzled all the mmentators, who, while agreeing as to e beauty of the psalm, are at issue as to e changes which are necessary to make construction grammatical. An ingen- is suggestion is made by Dr. Alexander aclaren which obviates the necessity of y changes and yet renders the psalm ear to the mind. It is that the psalm is composed for antiphonal, or part. nging. The first verse is practically the le, though forming part of the psalm. intimates that the poet is about to sing the man who sits, etc. The second rse is the solo of this man. He declares at he will address Jehovah as "My refuge d my fortress, my God in whom I ll trust." The next six verses are a oral answer sung by a choir recount- g the blessings that come to a man io has made such a declaration. In e ninth verse, the voice is again the nger of the solo of the second verse: For thou, Jehovah, art my refuge." gain the choir answers: "The Most igh thou hast made thy dwelling-place," d so on to the end of the thirteenth rse. The fourteenth, fifteenth, and six- enth verses, sung by another part of the oir, represent Jehovah as accepting his rvant's trust, and promising him protec- on, comfort, and long life. Thus the ree parts fall into their natural places, d each has its appropriate pronouns. robably no poet under the new dispensa- on would compose such a psalm. We ve learned by actual observation that e good man is afflicted like other men, d that the pestilence, and the evil, and e plague do come to him as they come others. It is not by immunity from le trials of life that the Christian is re- arded. He shares the common lot, but s faith in Christ and his love of God nable him to bear his burden, and even rejoice in tribulation.

Strange New Shrub that Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc. Free.

We have previously described the new botanic discovery, Alkavis, which proves a specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disor- der of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is now stated that Alkavis is a product of the well known Kava-Kava Shrub, and is a specific cure for these diseases just as quinine is for malaria. Hon. R. C. Wood, of Lowell, Ind., writes that in four weeks Alkavis cured him of Kidney and bladder disease of ten year's standing, and Rev. Thomas M. Owen, of West Pawlet, Vt., gives similar testimony. Many ladies also testify to its wonderful curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. The only importers of Alkavis so far are the Church Kidney Cure Co., of 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Blad- der disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Drop- sy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kid- neys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you en- tirely free, to prove its wonderful curative power

Warner Library to be Completed this Month.

The Special Introductory Price to be Immediately Advanced.

AFTER more than two years of constant labor, the Library of the World's Best Literature, under the editorial direction of Charles Dudley Warner, is nearly finished. Its completion will be a distinct literary event. The special introductory price under the arrangement made by Harper's Weekly Club will positively be withdrawn when the last volumes (which are now on the press) are issued.

Readers will do well to make note of this fact, since by joining the Club now they will obtain the work at nearly one-half the price at which it will hereafter be sold. We have no hesitation in advising our readers to take advantage of this opportunity. We believe the Warner Library is a work of such extraordinary character that it will sooner or later find its way into every home of culture and refinement. The fact that such a marvelous survey of the literature of the world, with the exposition and criticism of the foremost living men of letters, can be had for a sum less than the cost of the simplest collection of single volumes, makes this a work which from the mere standpoint of economy no lover of books can afford to be without.

The Library is not only an immense saving of time and study, but of money as well. A postal card sent to the Harper's Weekly Club, 91 Fifth Avenue, New York, will secure full particulars regarding the favorable terms upon which it is now being offered to Club members. We believe there are few of our readers who will not feel we have done them a special service in calling their attention to this monumental work, and giving timely notice of the withdrawal of the low Club price.

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

A prominent physician writes:

Dear Sirs:—Replying to yours on the use of Tartarlithine as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that the verdict is unanimous in its favor. I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity and promptness with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished for years.

There are about 1,400 contributions to the India Famine Relief Fund which we have not yet been able to acknowledge. The delay has been unavoidable on account of the pressure on our space of the Cuban acknowledgments. They will, however, be published as speedily as possible

The largest Junior Christian Endeavor Society in the New York City Union is at Five Points House of Industry. It numbers two hundred.

The State Board of Health of Indiana has just recommended the use of individual communion cups, on the ground that "the use of one cup is a menace to health."

In Palestine there are now twenty-three Jewish agricultural colonies, 6,000 colonists, and 100,000 acres under cultivation. This is mainly the work of the last twenty-five years.

Roman Catholicism is losing ground in Wales. The St. David's Jesuit College, near Mold, has been closed, and the work transferred to the neighborhood of Lyons, in France

Rev. H. Stafford Smith writes that his meetings at Roxborough, Pa., were crowded from the beginning and many professed conversion. He has just closed a series of meetings in the First Reformed Church, Philadelphia.

Rev. W. E. Needham's Sunday evening services in Calvary Baptist Church, Brooklyn, are densely crowded. A novel feature of the services is the artistic work of the preacher who illustrates his sermons by drawing in colored crayons the scenes he describes.

"I object to any clergyman in my diocese," says Dr. Ryle, Bishop of Liverpool, "who believes in the Popish mass. I have refused to license one man because he practised auricular confession. As for prayers for the dead, they can do no good, and there is no authority for them in the Bible."

The convention of the Student Volunteer movement at Cleveland, O., was larger than was anticipated. There were 1,730 delegates and at most of the meetings there were 2,000 persons present, including with the delegates, returned and visiting missionaries and the representatives of the mission boards.

The West-Side Business Men's Noonday Prayer Meeting in New York celebrated its twenty-second anniversary on March 3. Dr. John Hall delivered the annual address. The testimonies of business men to the benefits derived from this daily meeting are among the most striking proofs of the value of prayer.

Special anniversary services were conducted at the Janes Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church Forty-fourth street and Tenth avenue, New York, recently. The services commemorated the thirty-fourth anniversary of the building of the church and the forty-first anniversary of the founding of the church society.

Evangelist W. E. Geil who has been holding union meetings with remarkable success in the States of New York and New Jersey during the winter has sailed for England for a three months tour during which he expects to hold services in the chief cities of the country. He expects to resume work in this country early in September.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's meetings at Victoria, B. C., have been wonderfully blessed. Daily prayer-meetings were held in the houses of ladies connected with the churches to pray for the conversion of persons attending the services. At one of the services over five hundred young people rose to ask for prayer, and at another 250 declared their determination in Christ's strength to begin a new life.

Evangelist W. A. Bodell, of Crawfordsville, Ind., writes us that he has just closed a very remarkable series of meetings at Bellefontaine, O. There were some very wonderful conversions including men of over seventy years of age. Already eighty-eight persons who were brought to Christ during the meetings have united with the churches.

The Trustees of the Temperance Temple in Chicago have passed a resolution declaring that when the Temple should have become the property of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, it shall be renamed the Willard Temple. A circular letter, prepared by Miss Willard just before her death, will be sent out appealing for funds

A Summer Bible School is to be held at Kenka Park, N. Y., under the presidency of Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D., of Brooklyn. There will be a daily lecture from July 1 to September 1 on some phase of practical Christian work. We give this early notice in order that our readers may include this school in the programme of their summer engagements. Further details will be published soon.

According to a recent census the population of France is now 38,225,699. Of this number 651,823 are Protestants, namely, 572,623 Reformed and 79,200 Lutherans. Before the persecutions in the days of Louis XIV. the Protestant population in France was 2,000,000. In 1756 it had decreased to 4,000,000. At present there are in the entire country 750 Protestant parishes and 750 Protestant pastors.

The churches of the United States and Canada are endeavoring to take after the religious interests of the soldiers in the battlefields of the Klondike and in other ways to assist. Reports come of a wonderful [illegible] coming to the [illegible] Lake Nyanza, [illegible] In six weeks' tour the Rev. Dr. [illegible] tized two hundred [illegible] more than were kept [illegible] the first twenty years of the mission. Of the native workers he says: "They are the evangelists of their own people. They are right at the [illegible] and they smell and hear them. They know not book, but they have met God, and know where to find him."

On 10 Days' Trial

OPEN AND READY FOR BUSINESS

DON'T BUY A CAMERA

until you strike one that just suits you—one you can easily handle, that doesn't worry you with its little fits and freaks. There's only one way to find out—actual test. Don't buy at random—it's risky; don't begin to swap and trade—it's expensive. You can have the best—a '98 Pocket Kozy—on ten days' trial. If it suits, pay for it; if it doesn't, return it. That's a square proposition—an unprecedented offer—made because we know that the New Pocket Kozy Camera will give perfect satisfaction—positive delight—to both amateur and professional.

KOZY SUPERIORITY SHALL MAKE KOZY SALES

Experience has taught us that the best way to advertise a really meritorious article is to send it right out among the people, to be seen and tested. We apply this principle now to the introduction of our new Pocket Kozy. During the few weeks, we shall distribute 1,000 Kozys on ten days' trial—and at special prices until April 30. Our sole object is to thoroughly advertise the peerless Kozy, to spread far and wide the knowledge of its superiority over all other pocket cameras. No thought of profit now; our harvest-time will come when hundreds of delighted buyers have told their hosts of friends the true story of Kozy goodness. This special distribution paves the way to a sale of 100,000 Kozys in 1898. It's a great offer;—you can't afford to miss it. But it is purely an advertising proposition on our part. The New Kozy is a perfect pocket camera, original in design and construction. It is the

ONLY POCKET CAMERA THAT TAKES LARGE PICTURES

The new Pocket Kozy takes twelve pictures (each 3½ x 3½ inches) without re-loading. Its size when closed is 5¼ inches thick, 4½ inches wide, 5¼ inches long; weighs 16 ounces. It takes a sharper, better picture than many cameras twice its size and several times its weight. It slips easily into your pocket, and can be packed in your 'grip' without crowding out everything else. Because of its small size, will reach many a forbidden spot from which the ordinary "box" is barred. It is strictly a film camera, using Eastman cartridges. No heavy plates or plate-holders. Four cartridges—enough for 48 pictures—are less than a pocketful and weigh next to nothing. The new Pocket Kozy

The KOZY 1898

Loads by Daylight.

No dark-room required, either for loading or unloading. Any one can learn to operate the Kozy. After one hour's study of our "directions," the merest novice can handle the new Kozy as skillfully as a school-boy manipulates a jack-knife. It's a plain, "open-and-shut" case.

Some film cameras disappoint; at times an unexpected hitch halts the cartridge, and the exasperating result is two exposures on the same spot. Kozy won't do that; its action is as positive as chain and sprocket. It is simplicity simplified—can't get out of order. There is absolutely nothing to adjust; nothing to break; nothing to swell and stick; nothing to go wrong at the critical moment; nothing for you to do but point and push—you get a picture every time.

The KOZY 1898

Is the smallest camera ever made that takes a 3½ x 3½ picture on a cartridge film. It works perfectly in any latitude, afloat or ashore. Hence, the Kozy is pre-eminently the thing for

Tourists, Canoeists, Bicyclists

A little peep-hole tells the number of your picture—no complicated registering device. The films go in easy and come out easy. You will save time, money, worry and conscience this year by using a Kozy.

GREAT SPECIAL OFFER--UNTIL APRIL 30 ONLY

We unhesitatingly assert that our new Kozy is by far the best Pocket Camera in existence. It is much the lightest, the smallest, the simplest, the best finished, the easiest to operate. It takes a larger and better picture than any other pocket camera. It is fully the equal of any $20.00 camera now in the market, and is infinitely superior to all others in compactness, construction, convenience, and quality of work. We want you to see it and test it, so that we may secure your patronage and influence. The new Pocket Kozy shall stand squarely on its merits, and we will cheerfully accept your verdict. We don't want your money unless the Kozy makes good all our promises and exactly meets your wants; and of this your are to be the sole judge. Isn't that fair enough? Remember, you take no risk, for

FOLDED FOR YOUR POCKET

We Guarantee Satisfaction or No Pay

What You Must Do.—Send us your name and address (being sure to mention this paper), stating occupation, and references, with a deposit of $1.00. The Kozy will be forwarded, all charges prepaid. For ten days after its receipt, you are to test the camera to your satisfaction. If, at the expiration of that time, you decide to keep it, you are to send us $2.00, and thereafter $2.00 a month for 5 months, making a total payment of $13.00. Or, if you are not entirely satisfied, after ten days' trial, you are to return the camera to us, charges prepaid, and we will immediately refund your deposit of $1.00. This special offer will be withdrawn on April 30, or sooner if the 1,000 cameras are taken before that date. If you prefer to send cash in full with application, we will furnish the new Kozy for $10.00 cash until April 30. Full particulars, illustrated catalogue, order blanks, etc., sent free to any one who writes us mentioning this paper—a postal card will do. This remarkable proposition deserves instant investigation. Remember, we positively guarantee the new Pocket Kozy to be exactly as represented. We refer to the Mechanics' National Bank, of Boston. Write to-day; never again will such an opportunity be presented.

"The Christian Herald" and the Old Soldiers.

REV. JOS. A. BRADLEY, D.D., Chaplain of the National Soldiers' Home, Elizabeth Co., Va., writes from that institution a letter, which we feel that all our readers will take pleasure in reading, and to which many will be happy to make the suggested response:

"Having received numerous packages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for distribution among the comrades in this Home, and in many cases having no clue from which to make my thanks to the donors, please permit me to do this through your columns. I am grateful thankful to all who have thus kindly sent the supply of literature for the old soldiers, now rapidly passing away from this life, and many of whom can be reached with the message of God's love and grace by means of the printed page, when not by other channels. There are over four thousand veterans in this Branch of the National Home, with some four hundred of these always in the hospital. A large quantity of religious reading can be constantly used to distribute among so many, to whom a great number seldom, or never, attend the chapel services. In the private homes everywhere throughout our land are accumulations of interesting religious newspapers and tracts lying idle, cast aside and become a burden, and also Bibles (of good size type for aged eyes) laid aside where newer editions have come into use, and all which I would gladly and thankfully make use of if sent to this Home. Permit the suggestion that the young people or other societies could gather up and send me this really valuable, but now waste, material, and thereby sow precious seed with the hope of doing much good. Permit the further suggestion that such gathered matter be sent as freight (which would be inexpensive) and prepaid, for I have no funds sufficient to meet a considerable aggregate of charges.

Chaplain Bradley's suggestion is one that deserves to meet with a cordial response.

BURPEE'S Seeds for the MILLION

Please read carefully last page of last week's CHRISTIAN HERALD.

CORSET FACTS

THE real story of R. & G. Corsets has never been told to the women of America.

Hundreds of thousands of R. & G. Corsets have been sold because a comparatively few women have ascertained, by experience, that the "R. & G." is the perfection of fit and wear.

How many of the half million women readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are wearers of R. & G. Corsets?

Never mind.

Those women are happy and comfortable.

It is for the purpose of telling the others how to be happy and comfortable and economical that we have bought this page and print in it the facts about the "R & G."

Nobody questions the fact that this is the leading corset—the leading corset in the whole world.

Why?

It fits—fits from the day it is first put on till the day it is worn out—same size and shape always.

Every R. & G. Corset of the same size and style is exactly like every other R. & G. Corset of that size and style.

This is true of no other corset made.

Why?

Because no other corset is stretched over a steam heated form in the making.

The R. & G. Corset is.

This steam heated form is of iron. It is exactly the size and shape the corset is to be. It doesn't vary a hair's breadth.

When the R. & G. Corset has been cut and stitched and boned, it is dampened. Then it is stitched on this iron form.

This is the supreme test. The iron form is just right. It is modeled after a perfect human figure. The corset must fit it exactly, or it isn't right.

If it doesn't—if the cutter has wavered a particle—if the stitcher has varied from the pattern—the form shows it. That corset is thrown out. It never bears the "R. & G." trade-mark.

So accurate are our cutters and so careful are our stitchers that less than one per cent of the corsets fail in the iron test.

If the corset fits exactly, without the suspicion of a wrinkle, it is clamped in place and the steam turned on, and every hair's breadth of stretch is taken out of the goods.

This gives permanency to the right shape and form, which will stay in it until the last day you wear it.

That is why R. & G. Corsets always fit.

That is why they fit first, last and always.

That is why the right size is always right—your size is always your size.

The iron form cannot vary.

A new "R. & G." is as comfortable as an old one. You don't have to "break it in."

It doesn't "give."

It doesn't stretch.

If your dress waist fits it to-day, it will fit it to-morrow and next week and next month.

There is no change.

Get the right corset for your figure, and your corset troubles are over.

Be sure you get the right style.

Our booklet will tell you which it is.

There is a good deal of nonsense about corset prices.

Fancy prices mean fancy corsets—no better fit—probably not as much wear, because the material is finer.

The R. & G. Corset at a dollar fits as well and wears as well as the R. & G. Corset at six dollars. The difference is in the cost of material—silk instead of coutil, real lace, embroidery—made over the same form, though.

Worth the price if you care to pay so much for mere beauty of material and workmanship.

The dollar corset is the one we sell most of.

We make twenty different styles of dollar corsets.

We make over fifty different styles of higher and lower priced corsets.

We make more of the dollar kind than of all the rest combined.

In every city and in nearly every town in America, one or more dealers handle R. & G. Corsets.

Any dealer anywhere can handle them if he will—will handle them if he is wide-awake to his own and his customer's welfare.

Insist on having the R. & G. Corset.

If the dealer hasn't it and won't get it, write to us and we'll see that you get what you want.

Write for our booklet, anyway. It is entitled "Corset Facts."

It tells all about R. & G. Corsets in general, and our dollar corsets in particular. It shows pictures of twenty different styles of dollar corsets, and tells you how to select the right style for your figure.

It will interest and benefit you no matter what corset you wear.

It is free.

A NEW CORSET.

Short corsets reign in popular favor, and while we make a great many in the 10 1-2 inch length, we have made this new model to supply the demand for a corset preserving all the advantages of the extremely short corsets, and at the same time, furnishing a little more length over the bust and over the hips.

We have never made a corset with more artistic, symmetrical lines, and we believe this will be the most popular style of the year.

No. 397 is a short-hip, low-bust corset made of coutil with sateen strips. It has no side steels; has a 12-inch, four-hook clasp and is trimmed, top and bottom, with English lace and drawing ribbon. Comes in white drab and black. Sizes, 18 to 30. Price, $1.00.

Your dealer has it, or can get it; or you can send your dollar to us. If it isn't right—your money back.

THE NEW "NEGLIGEE"

The corset waist under the name "Negligee" is a new thing with us—a most desirable garment, destined we believe to achieve great and enduring popularity.

It is shapely, stylish and durable, and gives the support of a corset without a corset's absolute rigidity.

It is so new that all dealers do not yet have it. If your dealer hasn't, send a dollar and a quarter with your order direct to us. Order by your corset size. Your money back if the "Negligee" doesn't fully please you.

A full description and picture of it on a live model will be found in our booklet.

The booklet will be mailed free, promptly, on receipt of request.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

S. G. Spangler, H. N., Mateer, D. C., Banta and others. Replying to letters of inquiry concerning Cuba, we would say: 1. No crops can be raised in Cuba this summer, owing to the neglected condition of the land for two years past. 2. Our opinion is that all true Christians will take the view of Consul Barker, at Sagua, when he said the burning question before the world was how to save 2,000,000 lives from perishing for lack of food. All funds sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for Cuban Relief are expended through the Central Relief Committee in supplies, and shipped by that Committee to Gen. Lee at Havana, or to such of our consuls as Gen. Lee may direct.

We have received from many readers, in response to the request of a subscriber (made a few weeks ago), copies of verses entitled: "The cold wind swept the mountain height." The poem is by Seba Smith, and is found in several collections.

Mrs. G. M. P., Vernon, Texas, writes:

I cannot understand the spirit that is exhibited by many professing Christians, who seem unconcerned and oblivious to the suffering of the millions of starving human beings in Cuba, with skeleton arms reaching out and imploring pleading eyes staring them in the face. How could they coldly look on such scenes without calling the attention of his church to the great calamity that has befallen our fellow-men? Our pastors would do us good by causing us to feel for others' woes and trying to relieve and send relief to the suffering, to alleviate their misery and give joy and thankfulness to the faithful missionaries by putting in their hands the means of allaying their suffering.

Miss W. H. G. Keesville, N. Y. Should the destroying of the Maine and recent events lessen our efforts for the starving Cubans?

By no means. Nearly 400,000 have already died of famine, and a vast multitude is certain to perish, unless we can aid them. These are facts that stand alone, and are not influenced by the events you mention. The only duty we can recognize in such a case, is the duty of Christian humanity.

Mrs. U., Keene, N. H. 1. Where can I find the poem with the following is a part:

> And ever bright and fair,
> Take, O take me to your care.

2. What was the last poem of Alfred Tennyson?

1. It can be had in the form of sheet music of almost any music dealer. 2. Hallam, Lord Tennyson, in a recently published "Memoir" of his distinguished father says: "The last poem he finished was 'Whirl and follow the sun.'"

Earnest Inquirer, Staten Island, N. Y. No. There is no charge for admission to the Moody revival services in the Industrial Tabernacle, New York. The meetings are free, and there are no tickets. There are accommodations for 7,500 persons in the great hall. You can reach it from any direction, as many lines converge there. The meetings may be prolonged.

K. M. N., Huntingdon, Tenn. The question has been raised whether the Government appropriation is not sufficient for the Cuban need. Not being well informed I cannot answer.

There is no government appropriation for the Cuban relief work. The President and Secretary of State, in view of the great suffering there, appealed to the generosity of the American people to raise a Fund to help the starving Cubans, and appointed three Commissioners to direct the movement. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is in active co-operation with this Commission. Contributions of cotton goods, sheeting, calico, muslin, lawn, and summer light goods in piece may be sent to where they will be made up into suitable garments and shipped to Cuba for the famine sufferers, thousands of whom, Miss Barton reports, are in rags.

H. C., Plum City, Wis. Should the pastor of a Methodist Church consent or refuse to let a band of Crusaders come in his church to hold meetings?

It depends wholly on the circumstances. There are cases where such meetings might be a spiritual advantage, and others where, for sufficient reasons, they would not be so. The pastor, having the spiritual welfare of his people at heart, should be the best judge of the matter.

Sallie W., Trazwell, Va. Who was Melchizedek?

He was the king of Salem, and a true priest of Jehovah in a heathen nation. He blessed Abraham on his return from an engagement, and was rewarded by a portion of the spoils of battle. He has special notice in the Scriptures because he was the type of Christ, in being a priest as well as king, and being a high priest by divine appointment rather than by heredity.

Constant Reader, Perkinsville, Vt. If one person wrongs another, is the one wronged under obligation to forgive the one that wronged him, unless he asks to be forgiven?

Yes. See Matt. 6:15, Matt. 18:21, Mark 11:26. Our forgiveness need not depend upon his attitude. We are asked to forgive "our enemies" (see Luke 23:34) irrespective of whether they afterward become our friends or not.

L. H., Denver, Colo. What death did Peter and Paul die? was it on the cross, like Christ?

Under the bloody persecutions and authority of the Emperor Nero, Paul and Peter were both murdered in Rome. Paul was beheaded and Peter was crucified. Peter's crucifixion was in fulfilment of Christ's prophecy in John 21:18-19: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, when thou wast young, thou girdedst thyself, and walkest whither thou wouldst; but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee and carry thee whither thou wouldst not. Thus spake he, signifying by what death he shall glorify God."

Subscriber, Chicago, Ill. 1. Does close communion in the Baptist Church prohibit all, who have not been immersed, from communing? 2. Is it proper for a lady to take the gentleman's arm when walking together, or vice versa? 3. What does R. S. V. P. mean on an invitation?

1. Yes; close communion in the Baptist Church does prohibit all who have not been immersed from communing. Some Baptist ministers, however—among them some of the ablest—do not enforce the rule. 2. It is proper for a lady to take the arm of a gentleman in walking when the parties have been introduced and the acquaintance justifies it. The man should never take the arm of the lady; this is a vulgar custom. As a rule it is not good form for a lady to take the arm of a gentleman in the daytime. 3. They are the initials of a French phrase, which, translated, means "reply, if you please."

Gus Johnson, Ann Arbor, Mich. The J. C. E. of the church (Church of Christ) have twenty dollars which will be sent to you by Rev. Wm. Forrest. If the money is sent to Cuba by you will it be perfectly safe? Several are afraid the Spaniards may in some way get it.

There is no ground for apprehending that it will reach any hands other than those for whom it is intended. In the first place, no money is sent, only food and medicine. All funds are turned over to the Central Committee, who purchase the supplies and forward them to Gen. Lee and his Consular staff.

Reader, Otterbein, Ind. Is a minister or layman justified in praying for the overthrow of the saloon power who will not allow temperance or any such doctrine to betaught in the church, and who continues to vote with the saloon element?

We hardly believe the position can be regarded as fairly stated. In these days, when the pulpit, as a whole, is arrayed on the side of temperance and against the nefarious liquor traffic, no pastor would stoop to aid that traffic, even by his silence. But it is our duty, not to reject all things because all are not perfect, but to select and support the best, and work and pray for still better. Thus, one may conscientiously decide to support one of the existing parties which seems to afford the strongest hope of good government. Step by step we go heavenward, and, in the same way, by availing ourselves of the best facilities at command we may gradually aid in reaching the elimination of public evils like the drink traffic.

B. L. V., Fowlerville, Ind. In a sermon printed in issue Jan. 26, I find the words: "Purchase no prize-packages," etc. Why not? What is the matter with them? And what do you call "prize-packages?" Where are we to draw the line? I ask for conscience sake?

MR. AND MRS. HARA AND A GROUP OF THEIR JAPANESE MISSION CONVERTS.

Mr. Hara, the converted Japanese mission worker, whose remarkable story was lately told in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is known as "the Howard of Japan." His work is chiefly among the prisoners. He was formerly a chaplain for the prisons of the Hokkaido, where about 7,000 convicts are kept. The Hokkaido is a large island belonging to Japan, which, owing to its sterility and cold climate, was very sparsely populated. The Government built five great prisons on the island, to which it sent long-term convicts, who were employed on these public works. Among these men Mr. Hara labored, preaching to them the Gospel of Christ. Last Spring, upon the death of the Empress Dowager, the Emperor issued an imperial decree, setting several hundreds of Hokkaido convicts at liberty.

THOUSANDS CALL HIM BLESSED.

George Muller, the Noble Christian Philanthropist, Gone to His Reward—A Life of Consecrated Service Closed.

MANY readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are already familiar with the splendid Christian life-work of George Muller, the distinguished philanthropist, whose death in England was announced last week by cable. Mr. Muller has built orphanages costing $600,000 and maintained them till now, by the exercise of faith in God and in the liberality of his people. He has in all that time made no direct appeal for aid to any human agency. There were many times when the treasury and larder were empty and the dark shadow of want hung over the thousands of orphan children committed to his care, but in the darkest periods of trial his faith shone but more brightly; he would gather his flock of little ones around him, and in simple trustful prayer lay the need before the Heavenly Father. And the orphan's Friend always heard and unfailingly supplied the want. George Muller died "old and full of days," in his ninety-third year. He was born on September 27, 1805, in Kroppenstedt, near Halberstadt, Prussia. In 1810, his parents removed to Heimersleben, four miles from Kroppenstaedt, where his father was appointed Collector in the Excise. George Muller and his brother were educated on worldly principles, and he says of himself at this time, "I fell into habits of deceit and sinfulness."

In the year 1825 he entered the University of Halle, with high testimonials, in consequence of which he was permitted to preach in the Lutheran State Church. In his autobiography, published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in 1887, Mr. Muller makes serious arraignment of his own moral character up to this period. He says that in Halle there were "about 1,260 students, nearly 900 of whom studied divinity, and were all allowed to preach the Gospel, although there is reason to believe that not nine were truly converted." In 1825, he received his first real impulse towards a godly life in a prayer-meeting in the house of a tradesman in Halle, named Wagner. He gave up his evil ways, began to read missionary papers, and make sacrifices, in order that he might become a missionary.

His father's disappointment at his choice of a missionary career became occasion for Muller to put in operation that trust in Divine support which afterwards found such happy illustration in the large charities of his later life. He had to stay two years longer at the University, and needed funds but determined that he would take no more money from his father, believing it wrong, since, "he had no prospect that I should become what he wished me to be, a clergyman with a good living." This faith met response. Several American gentlemen, three of whom were professors in American colleges, came to Halle, wanted instructions in German, and were referred to Muller by the pious Dr. Tholuck, who had lately become professor of divinity to Halle. The Americans paid Muller so well that he had enough and to spare. Muller's piety and prayers began to affect the lives of a number of his fellow-students: through his instrumentality and that of his friend, Beta, a little praying-band, which came to number about twenty grew up among them. Muller also became interested in sharing the labors of an aged school-master among the miners at a little village near Halle, and he began preaching in various places.

In his spiritual life, he had many trials and seasons of depression but faith rose superior to them all. In 1827, he sought through the good Dr. Tholuck an appointment as missionary to the Hebrews through the London Missionary Society, and was accepted by that organization as "a missionary student on probation." Muller had occasion through his American friends to go Berlin, where he preached and prayed in prisons and poor-houses, even as he had done in Halle. March 19, 1829, he reached England, and there, not waiting for the slow action of the Society, he severed his connection with it, and began work wherever he found opportunity. In 1830 he became pastor at Ebenezer Chapel, Teignmouth, and the same year was married to Mary Groves.

In May, 1832, he moved to Bristol, where very soon he had to labor among a cholera stricken people. In 1833, his labors among the poor, began its leading to his great life-work for children. In 1835, Mr. Muller determined in his mind to build and maintain a great orphan house, and he began to lay the matter before the Lord: gifts came in, and people began to offer their services as teachers or caretakers. It was wholly a work of faith and there was no appeal. April, 1835, the first orphan house was opened with twenty-six children under the care of a volunteer matron and an experienced governess.

How this modest charity enlarged, year by year, until the attention of the Christian world was fixed upon the mammoth system of orphanages at Ashley Down, is a story too long for present telling. Our readers have been kept in touch with this, as with other good works. They know how thousands of children looked to this man, who possessed not a dollar's worth of personal property for shelter, food and raiment: they know how this man looked to God; and they know how God met his faith.

During the late years of his life, he made long missionary journeys, going all over the world, encouraging and stimulating the missionary spirit everywhere. He died in the Gospel harness.

Making Religion a Joy.

The Social Side of Christianity as Presented at the Phelps Settlement in New York.

THE Phelps Settlement, in New York, is a notable instance of the materialization of an idea comparatively new in church work—viz., the introduction of University Settlement features. In the University Settlement attention is concentrated upon the educational and social sides of philanthropic work, but direct religious instruction is interdicted. The Phelps Settlement, on the other hand, is incontrovertible evidence of the fact that a Social Settlement with religious features, can succeed. The Settlement, is situated at No. 314 East Thirty-fifth street, New York, and its workers never hesitate to speak of Jesus Christ, nor to make known their religious convictions at all times when occasion arises.

In 1866 a little band of devoted Christian workers organized a mission in this part of New York's squalid and hapless East side. There was the missionary visitor to go his rounds in the tenements among the poor and destitute: the Sabbath School, the prayer-meetings once or twice a week, the giving of money and service in the somewhat indiscriminate charity of the present day. Much good was done, but the work languished: then a "Union Church" was organized, with the same result: next the mission came into the charge of the Park Presbyterian Church, for a time. Its directors converted it into a Church Settlement, with University Settlement characteristics, and straightway it began to thrive. Mr. W. E. McCord, a resident worker from the University Settlement was first put in charge, and as the work passed in turn from him to H. W. Bainton and Mr. A. E. Krom: the combined ideas University and Church Settlement rapidly took shape in enlarging and effective operations. The present director, Rev. Theodore W. Harris, the Assistant Pastor of the Park Presbyterian Church, canvasses the neighborhood, going into every tenement, and finding out the nature or absence of religious feeling of every family, and thus keeps an approximate census of the number and needs of those who are not covered by the federation of churches. Many are thus drawn into church relations or attracted by invitation to the social life of the Settlement: distress is discovered, cases investigated, need relieved by charitable ministration and work provided. The main object of the Settlement is rather to awaken and foster that self-respect which will lead men to self-support. "We take men as they are—men with no special religious proclivities—and get thoroughly acquainted with them. At our Men's Club we discuss matters of general interest, politics, social and labor problems, letting the talk drift where it will; and without our compulsion, it often drifts to religious questions. The general idea of the Settlement is to be a blessing to the neighborhood in many ways."

The Excelsior Club for young men and the Junior Excelsior Club for boys are features of the Settlement, as are the Helping Hand, the Mothers' Club, the Young People's Meeting, the Sunshine Club, and choral meetings, the Saturday Sewing-Circle, the Penny Provident Club, and reading-rooms. The Settlement is fortunate in its conscientious resident workers, Dr. Du Bois and Rev. J. W. Stephens. The entire work is under the supervision of the session of Park Presbyterian Church.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

People Who Have Lost Their Way.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Gen. 21: 19, ...

And God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water; and she went and filled the bottle with water and gave the lad drink.

MORNING breaks upon Beersheba. There is an early stir in the house of old Abraham. There has been trouble among the domestics. Hagar, an assistant in the household, and her son, a brisk lad of sixteen years, have become impudent and insolent, and Sarah, the mistress of the household, puts her foot down very hard and says that they will have to leave the premises. They are packing up now. Abraham, knowing that the journey before his servant and her son will be very long and across desolate places, in the kindness of his heart sets about putting up some bread and a bottle with water in it. It is a very plain lunch that Abraham provides, but I warrant you there would have been enough of it had they not lost their way. "God be with you!" said old Abraham as he gave the lunch to Hagar and a good many charges as to how she should conduct the journey. Ishmael, the boy, I suppose, bounded away in the morning light. Boys always like a change. Poor Ishmael! He has no idea of the disasters that are ahead of him. Hagar gives one long, lingering look on the familiar place where she had spent so many happy days, each scene associated with the pride and joy of her heart, young Ishmael.

The scorching noon comes on. The air is stifling and moves across the desert with insufferable suffocation. Ishmael, the boy, begins to complain and lies down, but Hagar rouses him up, saying nothing about her own weariness or the sweltering heat; for mothers can endure anything. Trudge, trudge, trudge. Crossing the dead level of the desert, how wearily and slowly the miles slip! A tamarind that seemed hours ago to stand only just a little ahead, inviting the travelers to come under its shadow, now is as far off as ever, or seemingly so. Night drops upon the desert, and the travelers are pillowless. Ishmael, very weary, I suppose instantly falls aleep. Hagar, as the shadows of the night begin to lap over each other—Hagar hugs her weary boy to her bosom and thinks of the fact that it is her fault that they are in the desert. A star looks out, and every falling tear it kisses with a sparkle. A wing of wind comes over the hot earth and lifts the locks from the fevered brow of the boy. Hagar sleeps fitfully, and in her dreams travels over the weary day, and half awakes her son by crying out in her sleep, "Ishmael! Ishmael!"

And so they go on day after day and night after night, for they have lost their way. No path in the shifting sands; no sign in the burning sky. The sack empty of the flour; the water gone from the bottle. What shall she do? As she puts her faltering Ishmael under a stunted shrub of the arid plain, she sees the blood-shot eye, and feels the hot hand, and watches the blood bursting from the cracked tongue, and there is a shriek in the desert of Beersheba, "We shall die! We shall die!" Now, no mother was ever made stronger cowards to hear her son cry in vain for a drink. Heretofore she had cheered her son by promising a speedy end of the journey, and even smiled upon him when she felt despairingly enough. Now there is nothing to do but place him under a shrub and let him die. She had thought that she would sit there and watch until the spirit of her boy would journey forever, and then she would throw out her own life on the silent heart. But as the boy began to play the last scene in agony of thirst and struggle to depart, and Hagar, his mother, is to see him, she cannot endure the spectacle. She puts a few more shrubs and some of the sand between her boy and herself, and the desert seems nothing, and her cry startles even beyond the heavens, and away out of God's eye comes a tear, and looks down upon the appalling grief and cries: "Hagar, what aileth thee?" She looks up and sees the angel pointing to a well of water, where she fills the bottle for the lad. Thank God! Thank God!

I learn from this Oriental scene, in the first place, what a sad thing it is when people do not know their place, and get too proud for their business! Hagar was an assistant in that household, but she wanted to rule there. She ridiculed and jeered until her son, Ishmael, got the same tricks. She dashed out her own happiness, and threw Sarah into a great fret; and if she had stayed much longer in that household she would have upset calm Abraham's equilibrium. My friends, one-half of the trouble in the world to-day comes from the fact that people do not know their place, or, finding their place, will not stay in it. When we come into the world there is always a place ready for us. A place for Abraham. A place for Sarah. A place for Hagar. A place for Ishmael. A place for you and a place for me.

Our first duty is to find our sphere; our second is, to keep it. We may be born in a sphere far off from the one for which God finally intends us. Sixtus V. was born on the low ground, and was a swineherd; God called him up to wave a sceptre. Ferguson spent his early days in looking after sheep; God called him up to look after stars, and be a shepherd watching the flocks of light on the hillsides of heaven. Hogarth began by engraving pewter pots; God raised him to stand in the enchanted realm of a painter. The shoemaker's bench held Bloomfield for a little while; but God raised him to sit in the chair of a philosopher and Christian scholar. The soap-boiler of London could not keep his son in that business, for God had decided that Hawley was to be one of the greatest astronomers of England.

On the other hand we may be born in a sphere a little higher than that for which God intends us. We may be born in a castle, and play in a costly conservatory, and feed high-bred pointers, and angle for gold-fish in artificial ponds, and be familiar with princes; yet God may better have fitted us for a carpenter's shop, or dentist's forceps, or a weaver's shuttle, or a blacksmith's forge. The great thing is to find just the sphere for which God intended us, and then to occupy that sphere, and occupy it forever. Here is a man God fashioned to make a plough. There is a man God fashioned to make a constitution. The man who makes the plow is just as honorable as the man who makes the constitution. There is a woman who was made to fashion a robe, and yonder is one intended to be a queen and wear it. It seems to me that in the one case as in the other, God appoints the sphere, and the needle is just as respectable in his sight as the sceptre. I do not know but that the world would long ago have been saved if some of the men out of the ministry were in it, and some of those who are in it were out of it. I really think that one-half the world may be divided into two quarters—those who have not found their sphere, and those who having found it, are not willing to stay there. How many are struggling for a position a little higher than that which God intended them. The bondswoman wants to be mistress. Hagar keeps crowding Sarah. The small wheel of a watch which beautifully went treading its golden pathway wants to be the balance-wheel, and the sparrow with chagrin drops into the brook because it cannot, like the eagle, cut a circle under the sun.

Again, I find in this Oriental scene a lesson of sympathy with woman when she goes forth trudging in the desert. What a great change it was for this Hagar! There was the tent, and all the surroundings of Abraham's house, beautiful and luxurious, no doubt. Now she is going out into the hot sands of the desert. Oh, what a change it was! And in our day we often see the wheel of fortune turn. Here is some one who lived in the very bright home of her father. She had everything possible to administer to her happiness—plenty at the table, music in the drawing-room, welcome at the door. She is led forth into life by some one who cannot appreciate her. A dissipated soul comes and takes her out in the desert. Cruelties blot out all the lights of that home circle. Harsh words wear out her spirits. The high hope that shone out over the marriage altar while the ring was being set, and the vows given, and the benediction pronounced, have all faded with the orange blossoms, and there she is to-day broken-hearted, thinking of past joys and present desolation and coming anguish. Hagar in the wilderness!

Here is a beautiful home. You cannot think of anything that can be added to it. For years there has not been the suggestion of a single trouble. Bright and happy children fill the house with laughter and song. Books to read. Pictures to look at. Lounges to rest on. Cup of domestic joy full and running over. Dark night drops. Pillow hot. Pulses flutter. Eyes close. And the foot whose well-known steps on the door-sill brought the whole household out at eventide crying: "Father's coming!" will never sound on the door-sill again. A long, deep grief ploughed through all that brightness of domestic life. Paradise lost. Widowhood. Hagar in the wilderness!

How often is it we see the weak arm of woman conscripted for this battle with the rough world. Who is she, going down the street in the early light of the morning, pale with exhausting work, not half slept out with the slumbers of last night, tragedies of suffering written all over her face, her lustreless eyes looking far ahead, as though for the coming of some other trouble? Her parents called her Mary, or Bertha, or Agnes, on the day when they held her up to the font and the Christian minister sprinkled on the infant's face the washings of a holy baptism. Her name is changed now. I hear it in the shuffle of the worn-out shoes. I see it in the figure of the faded calico. I find it in the lineaments of the woe-begone countenance. Not Mary, nor Bertha, nor Agnes, but Hagar in the wilderness. May God have mercy upon woman in her toils, her struggles, her hardships, her desolation, and may the great heart of divine sympathy inclose her forever!

Again, I find in this Oriental scene the fact that every mother leads forth tremendous destinies.

You say: "That isn't an unusual scene, a mother leading her child by the hand." Who is it that she is leading? Ishmael, you say. Who is Ishmael? A great nation is to be founded—a nation so strong that it is to stand for thousands of years against all the armies of the world. Egypt and Assyria thunder against it, but in vain. Gaulus brings up his army, and his army is smitten. Alexander decides upon a campaign, brings up his hosts, and dies. For a long while that nation monopolizes the learning of the world. It is the nation of the Arabs. Who founded it? Ishmael, the lad that Hagar led into the wilderness. She had no idea she was leading forth such destinies. Neither does any mother. You pass along the street and see and pass boys and girls who will yet make the earth quake with their influence.

My mind leaps forward thirty years from now, and I find myself looking through the wickets of a prison. I see a face scarred with every crime. His chin on his open palm, his elbow on his knee, a picture of despair. As I open the wicket, he starts and I hear his chain clank. The jail-keeper tells me that he has been in there now three times—first for theft, then for arson, now for murder. He steps upon the trap door, the rope is fastened to his neck, the plank falls, his body swings into the air, his soul swings off into eternity. Who is he, and where is he? This afternoon playing kite on the city commons. Mother, you are now hoisting a throne or forging a chain; you are kindling a star or digging a dungeon.

A Christian mother a good many years ago sat teaching lessons of religion to her child, and he drank in those lessons. She never knew that Lamphier would come forth and establish the Fulton street prayer meeting, and by one meeting revolutionize the devotions of the whole earth and thrill the eternities with his Christian influence. Lamphier said it was his mother who brought him to Jesus Christ. She never had an idea that she was le ing forth such destinies. But oh, wher see a mother reckless of her influen rattling on toward destruction, garland for the sacrifice with unseemly mirth a godlessness, dancing on down to perditi taking her children in the same directi preparing them for a life of frivolity death of shame and dishonor, and eternity of disaster, I cannot help say: "There they go—there they Hagar and Ishmael!"

I tell you there are wilder deserts t Beer-sheba in many of the fashiona circles of this day. Dissipated pare leading dissipated children. Avaricio parents leading avaricious child Prayerless parents leading prayer children. They go through every str up every dark alley, into every cel along every highway. Hagar and mael! and while I pronounce their nan it seems like the moaning of the de wind: "Hagar and Ishmael!"

I learn one more lesson from this ental scene, and that is, that every wil ness has a well in it. Hagar and Ishn gave up to die. Hagar's heart sank wit her as she heard her child cry "Water!" Water! Water!" "A she says, "my darling, there is no wa This is a desert." And then God's a said from the cloud: "What aileth t Hagar?" And she looked up and him pointing to a well of water, where filled the bottle for the lad. Blessed God, that there is in every wildern well, if you only know how to find fountains for all these thirsty souls. that last day, on that great day of feast, Jesus stood and cried: "If man thirst, let him come to me drink." All these other fountains find are mere mirages of the desert. here I tell you of the elixir of everlas life bursting from the "Rock of Ag and that drinking that water you s never get old, and you will never be and you will never die. "Ho, every that thirsteth, come ye to the wat Ah! here is a man who says: "I have looking for that fountain a great w but can't find it." And here is some else who says: "I believe all you but I have been trudging along in the derness and can't find the fountain." you know the reason? I will tell You never looked in the right d tion.

Look up, where Hagar looked. never would have found the fountai all, but when she heard the voice of angel she looked up, and she saw the f pointing to the supply. And, O sou to-day with one earnest, intense prayer would only look up to Christ, he w point you down to the supply in the wi ness. "Look unto me, all ye ends of earth, and be ye saved; for I am God there is none else!" Look! Look Hagar looked!

Have you seen the Nyctanthes? It beautiful flower, but it gives very fragrance until after sunset. The pours its richness on the air. And grace of the Gospel that I commen you now, while it may be very sweet ing the day of prosperity, it pours t its richest aroma after sundown. A will be sundown with you and me awhile. When you come to go out of world, will it be a desert march, or w be drinking at a fountain?

A converted Hindoo was dying, an heathen comrades came around him tried to comfort him by reading son of the pages of their theology; but he w his hand, as much as to say; "I don't to hear it." Then they called in a hea priest, and he said: "If you will recite the Numtra, it will deliver you hell." He waved his hand, as much say: "I don't want to hear that." they said: "Call on Juggernaut." shook his head, as much as to say can't do that." Then they thought haps he was too weary to speak, and said: "Now, if you can't say 'Jugger think of him." He shook his head as much as to say: "No, no, no!" they bent down to his pillow, and said: "In what will you trust?" His lighted up with the very glories of t lestial sphere, as he cried out, rallyi his dying energies: "Jesus." Oh, this hour to the fountain! I will tell the whole story in two or three sente Pardon for all sin. Comfort for all trouble. Light for all darkness. every wilderness has a well in it.

OVER 100,000 LIVES

Saved by America's Gift to Starving India...

The India Government's Official Report, Showing the Magnificent Results of The Christian Herald Readers' Relief Work.

AST thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days" (Eccles. 11:1). Acting in following the Scriptural injunction, with loving hearts and generous hands, the Christian people of our own land have indeed realized this experience, for the bread they sent to India has come back to them multiplied an hundredfold in the form of human gratitude and divine blessing. That work for India, done so gladly and so zealously, at a time when it was impossible to foresee the result of their efforts and their self-denials, is now shown by the official reports just received from the Government of India to have been the means of saving upwards of

One hundred thousand precious lives!

This glorious record of service, rendered in His name, is one in which every reader of this journal has a share. It was the work of all—long, patient, loving work, but the outcome sheds a halo of splendor over it all, now that the struggle is over. We can only now see how richly it has been blessed and how every little gift, however small and insignificant, that went over the seas to India with a fervent prayer, found its mark and performed that for which it was sent.

The official documents which convey this intelligence are in the form of State papers. The first is addressed to the Secretary of State for India by Lord Elgin, Governor-General and his official associates:

The first official notification of the receipt of our India Famine Fund work, came in the State Department in this letter:

DEPT. OF STATE,
WASHINGTON.
Dr. J. Klopsch, "The Christian Herald," New York

SIR:—I take pleasure in transmitting herewith a copy of a note of the 8th inst., with inclosed accompaniments, from the British Ambassador at this capital, conveying the thanks of the Government of India to yourself and the Government and people of the United States for the sympathy they have shown towards the sufferers from famine in India by gifts of grain and money. You will observe that the British Secretary of State for India desires to associate himself cordially with the expression of thanks in question. Respectfully yours,

WILLIAM R. DAY,
Asst. Secretary of State.

The letter of the British Ambassador, referred to above, reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Hon. John Sherman,

SIR:—I have received instructions from the Marquis of Salisbury to inform you that the Government of India desire that their grateful acknowledgment may be tendered to the Government and to the people of the United States for the generous sympathy they have shown towards the sufferers from famine in India by gifts of grain and money, and Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India wishes to associate himself cordially with this expression of thanks. I have the honor to transmit copy of a despatch from the Government of India with its enclosures, and to request you to be good enough to convey the thanks of Her Majesty's Government and of the Government of India to Dr. Klopsch and others by whose exertions the grain and money were collected. I have the honor to be with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant, JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE.

Accompanying the figures is the following important document signed by Lord Elgin, the Viceroy of India, and his official associates in the Government relief work:

No. 85 of 1897. R. & V. 3,157 1897
GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE AND AGRICULTURE

FAMINE.

To the Right Honorable Lord George F. Hamilton, M. P., Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India:

MY LORD—With reference to the correspondence ending with your Despatch No. 113-Rev., dated the 22nd July, 1897, we have the honor to forward, for your Lordship's information, a copy of three letters with enclosures, from the Vice-Chairman and Honorary Secretary, Indian Famine Charitable Relief Fund, regarding the distribution of the cargo of American grain, which, together with a considerable amount in cash, was collected by charitable persons in the United States for the relief of sufferers from the famine in India, and conveyed to Calcutta in the S.S. City of Everett, which was chartered by the Government of the United States of America for the free conveyance of grain to India.

No. 2016, dated 8th Nov. 1897.
No. 2018, dated 9th Nov. 1897.
No. 2046, dated 10th Nov. 1897.

2. The Government and people of India are deeply indebted to the Government of the United States for the assistance thus rendered in the mitigation of suffering from famine; and in particular to Dr. Klopsch, proprietor of the New York CHRISTIAN HERALD, and the many other persons by whose exertions the grain and money received in India have been collected.

We would request your Lordship to be good enough to convey our grateful acknowledgments to the Government of the United States, and through it, to all who have shown such generous sympathy with the famine-stricken people of India. We have the honor to be, My Lord, your Lordship's most obedient, humble servants

ELGIN. E. H. H. COLLEN.
G. S. WHITE. C. M. RIVAZ.
M. D. CHALMERS.

Then follows an official diary showing the handling and ultimate distribution of the Everett's cargo, which consisted of 5,721 sacks of beans, 9,700 sacks of rye and 23,010 sacks of Indian corn, the collection of many hundreds of farmers in the West, and of thousands of our readers elsewhere.

The official report recites the labors of the Interdenominational Committee, under Bishop Thoburn, and the generosity of the Indian railroads in giving special transportation facilities. Bishop Thoburn's official report to the Indian Government shows a total of 155 carloads, distributed in the various famine districts as follows:

"The Christian Herald" Grain Distribution.

GRAND TOTALS.

Total car-loads of grain sent to Central Provinces and Hydrabad assigned districts	82
Total car-loads of grain sent to Northwestern Provinces and Oudh	34
Total car-loads of grain sent to Bengal, Bombay, Madras, Rajputana, etc.	16
Total car-loads of grain sent by Rev. George Lambert	23

Concerning this distribution, the Government report says:

In a few districts in the central provinces, and possibly elsewhere, a part of the grain was placed at the disposal of the district officers for distribution through official channels and by the local relief committees. At other stations the missionaries were aided by the Consul, and in some instances direct assistance of the magistrates. As a general rule (though there have been occasional exceptions) the grain was distributed to Christians and non-Christians alike. Although the grain was not made over to, or distributed by, the Central Committee, they have evidence that the generous gift of the people of America has been wisely administered, and has done much to alleviate the sufferings of the famine-stricken districts to which it was sent. And they feel that a deep debt of gratitude for this timely and munificent gift is due both from those who are concerned in the administration of relief; to those charitable persons who contributed the grain; to those who organized the collection and despatch, and to the Government of the United States.

In a letter from Bishop Thoburn, quoted in the Government report, these passages occur:

It has been extremely gratifying to learn that the gift of this grain has impressed the people much more favorably than any distribution of money which has taken place. In some instances slight disturbances occurred, owing to the eagerness of the crowd to get relief, but as a general rule the people waited quietly and patiently until their turn came and the expressions of gratitude and delight were often very touching. When they saw the strange grain they were convinced that it must have come from a far-off country, and they seemed deeply moved when thus reminded that there were people, many thousands of miles distant, who cared for them.

In reference to the cash sent to India by Dr. Klopsch, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I am able to report the actual receipt by the Committee, of which I was Chairman, of Rs. 2,80,000. I am expecting daily Rs. 1,00,000 more, having been notified of its coming, so that it may safely be included in the total. In addition to this, Dr. Klopsch to my knowledge has sent about Rs. 40,000 to other parties.

Then follows the report of the Government Deputy Commissioner, also relating to the distribution. In part it says:

As a sample two trucks (car) were sent to Rupond station on the Bengal-Nagpur Railway to be distributed by the Circle Relief Officer of Burwara. One truck (car) was made over to the Church Missionary Society of Kutni for distribution amongst the poor of the town. The remainder was given out in doles among the poorer classes of cultivators, particularly aborigines and low castes. We had already lists of these poor cultivators prepared for the purposes of the Mansion House Fund. The amount of the latter was not sufficient to adequately supply the cultivators with food grain during the rains, when they were plowing their fields and tending their crops, and the distribution of the American grain therefore, served a most useful object into some extent supplying this want. The distribution was effected in every case under the control of the Famine Relief Officer, and I can testify to the work having been well carried out. The general plan adopted was first to choose a village where the inhabitants were aborigines or were known to be specially poor. The Mansion House relief list of the village was scrutinized, and the poorer tenants selected. A signed ticket was then given to the tenant for twenty or thirty seers, or as the case might be, and he was told to go to the central store where the grain was kept, present his ticket and receive his dole. Tickets of different colors were issued for different quantities of grain, so that the illiterate people might know the value of their tickets and get supplied with the right amount.

The expenses were comparatively light. The accounts received show that the whole distribution was effected at a cost of considerably under Rs. 1,000.

People were keener about the distribution of the grain than about any other kind of relief. It was the form of charity which appealed to them most, and I can testify from my own experience to the gratitude with which it was received. The distribution was made on the basis of the charitable lists prepared for each village. The poorest villages were supplied first.

The total number of persons kept alive by the grain was 51,000 as shown by the official table of the Government of India, given below. Fully 50,000 more were saved by the food purchased in India with the money sent by the Fund to Bishop Thoburn's Committee and to individual missionaries. The various remittances made by the Fund up to the present time make an aggregate of over $175,000, and it is estimated that this magnificent total of contributions from the Christian people of our land has been the means, under Divine blessing, of preserving between 50,000 and 65,000 natives from starvation. Following are the figures:

51,000 Persons Saved by the Grain Alone.

Place.	Families helped.	No. of persons in family.	Quantity in maunds.
Katni	4,896	17,000	2,580
Sleemanabad-Sehora	5,530	10,000	3,340
Jubbulpore	4,000	15,000	2,190
Total persons kept alive by the grain.		51,000

The total Fund figures are not yet received. Add to the foregoing the number of persons kept alive by the money sent to India through the Fund, at least 50,000

Total saved through the Fund . . 101,000

Our readers everywhere must rejoice with us at this blessed result of their labors in behalf of India.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon the advertisements, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

THE WOMAN OF CANAAN.

Sunday School Lesson for April 3. Matt. 15 : 21-31. Golden Text, Matt 15 : 25.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE ministry of our Lord was chosen for him. He did not guide his own steps. His "hearing heart," ever attentive to the Father, who wakened him morning by morning to hear as one that is taught (Isa. 50 : 5, R.V.), received his instructions, and, without any consideration as to how such directions would affect himself, he always delighted to do his Father's will (Ps. 40 : 8). It was not pleasing to the flesh when the fault-finding Pharisees and Scribes came down from Jerusalem to interrogate him, saying: "Why do thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders? for they wash not their hands when they eat bread" (Matt. 15 : 1-2). Depending as he did upon the Father, moment by moment, he was not at a loss for an answer; and it was in the form a question to them, "Why do ye, also, transgress the commandment of God because of your tradition?" They transgress tradition, you transgress commandment: they fail to follow the elders, you disobey God.

And he went on to explain: "For God said, Honor thy father and thy mother, and he that speaketh evil of father or mother, let him die the death. But ye say, Whosoever shall say to his father or his mother, That wherewith thou mightest have been profited by me is given to God; he shall not honor his father or his mother. And ye have made void the Word of God because of your tradition" (Matt. 15 : 1-6, R. V.). Seeing all these things in the light of his Father, he could meet his antagonists, whether men or devils from a point of vantage. He saw them from above as his Father revealed them, and he met their accusations by confronting them with their sin, not against him but against God. To this day it is the same thing. Those who most criticise the true work of the Spirit of God are they who make void the Word of God through tradition, and who set up the word of man in church discipline, or the word of man in worldly customs against the Word of God, so as to make it void by this tradition.

Was our Lord irritated at the presumption of these men in blaming him and his disciples? No; it was ever with him, "For this cause came I unto this hour (John 12 : 27); my father makes no mistake." "The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it" (John 18 : 2)? Jesus, instead of pitying himself, as some of his disciples pity themselves when a painful or disagreeable interview becomes their special test, the Lord made use of the occasion to enlighten the conscience of his would-be judges; and to teach his disciples a lesson. He showed the Pharisees that they were fulfilling the Scriptures in a way they had never dreamed of. They were the people foreseen by the prophets seven hundred years before, who honored God with their lips, while their heart was far from him, and he quoted to them Isaiah's text, worshiping him, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men (ver 7-9).

With what relief must our Lord have turned from the pride of his brethren according to the next one, when he was left to the company of Tyre and Sidon to the interview with a woman who understood him as not even one of his disciples did! She was a Canaanitish woman. Her first word to him was, "Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou Son of David." She acknowledged him as he who should reign on the throne of his father David (Luke 1 : 32); she owned him as her Lord, and pleaded, "Have mercy on me, my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil." It was a wonderful prayer from a Canaanite, and one from which Christians may learn much. She put the Lord in his true place. Far removed from the imperious demand of the nobleman of Cana, "Sir, come down ere my child die" (John 4 : 49), this woman regarded the dignity and position of him to whom she appealed. She prayed with her eye on Jesus, not on her prayer. "But he answered her not a word." How unlike his ordinary custom! When the Lord goes out of his way to do a thing, he has some special reason for it, some special purpose at heart. The Lord Jesus perceived in this woman one who could stand a test, and he would so try her that her faith might serve him as an example to the disciples themselves. These men, seeing that Jesus rebuffed her, interfered. They came and besought him, saying, "Send her away for she crieth after us," probably meaning that he should grant her petition as he had granted so many others, and heal her daughter, but the reason they gave was a very selfish one, "for she crieth after us." Not for thy sake, not for her sake, not for the suffering daughter's sake, but for our sake, that we may be rid of the nuisance, "send her away."

But there was more of oneness between this woman, who made her daughter's care her own, and the Saviour who came to make the sinner's care his own, than there was between selfish disciples and their unselfish master; that woman could serve his purpose while they sought to serve their own. Jesus answered, not addressing himself to them, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." And she was a Canaanite. It was indeed a rebuff, as though he whom she acknowledged as the Son of David should say, "And who art thou that makest claims on me?" But she had seen one who could help her. Instead of being driven back into despair, she came near and worshipped him, saying, "Lord, help me." She would not be repelled. Driven from point to point, owning that she had no right, that she was but a dog, yet she knew that he could not be other than he was, Jesus, Saviour and Healer, and on the ground of her confidence in him, irrespective of her unworthiness, she urged her plea. "O woman, great is thy faith; be it done unto thee even as thou wilt." And her daughter was healed from that hour.

She had her way, but Jesus first had his way. When our Lord in his love and wisdom permits us to be tried in unexpected and incomprehensible ways, the enemy may seek to persuade us that our Lord is captious, or that he fails in love towards us. But who knows what may be the purposes for his kingdom and glory which may be served by that test in which he shall gain the victory. What has it been for believers of all ages since his time that Abraham passed victoriously through the great tests of faith regarding the birth of Isaac, and his offering up this beloved son in sacrifice, of whom it was said that "In Isaac shall thy seed be called!" What has it been for thousands of tried believers since, that Job came through his tremendous tests humbled, broken, but loyal to his God; adoring him!

Who can estimate the blessing to thousands of the fiery furnace in Babylon and God's men of faith in the fire; of David in the den of lions; of Paul in his continual tests? All go to prove that God is able to deliver, and that he is faithful to his own. God needs witnesses; and blessed is he, and blessed is she, whom the Lord elects to pass through special tests; it is no light honor. Blessed is he, and blessed is she who can stand an apparent rebuff, holding against all appearances, to what God has declared himself to be! Blessed are all they who put their trust in him! The Jews, the children of the kingdom, failed our Lord, but the Gentile centurion, and the Syro-Phœnician woman understood him. Turning from the persecuting, criticising Scribes and Pharisees, the heart of the Lord found rest in the trust reposed in him by this woman, who knew herself only as a dog!"

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

SURPRISE is a natural feeling in reading this incident of the woman of Canaan. Christ's treatment of her was so unlike his usual kind and compassionate manner, that we wonder what could have caused it. The woman presented the conditions which generally moved him to ready compliance. She was unselfishingly pleading for another, and she showed sublime faith in his power. Why then treat her in a way that seems harsh, if not insulting? It may have been that Christ was considering the people around him, his disciples and the followers who had accompanied him from Galilee, rather than the woman. They had just witnessed the captious criticism of the religious leaders of the day, who were concerned about the washings and rites and ceremonies which constituted their religion, and could not open their hearts to the broader and higher view of a religion of faith and of a transformed spirit. By drawing this woman out, and provoking her to show her faith and her earnestness, even when repelled, he was setting before his followers a contrast which was full of teaching. These blessings that his own countrymen held so lightly, others coveted. This faith, which was so rare among his own people, was manifested by a woman belonging to a nation which they regarded as dogs. It is as if he was shaming them by this example of unwavering faith.

Then Jesus departed. We can understand how weary he must have been of such nonsensical questions as those addressed to him by the Scribes and Pharisees. "Why do not thy disciples wash their hands before they eat?" How pitifully small their minds must have been! Christ preached about purity of heart, about hungering and thirsting after righteousness, about the duty of loving even enemies and about the need of being born again; but these people take no notice of these high themes and ask him about these ceremonial washings. It was no wonder Jesus departed. The same spirit survives now. If a great preacher is winning souls for Christ and turning many to righteousness, many people withhold the approval until they have received answe to the questions: "What is his denomin tion?" "How was he baptized?" "I whom was he ordained?" etc. A writ who spent some years in the Tyrol, on t borders of Austria and Italy, says that l knew brigands who would rob and k travelers without compunction, but t same men would be in an agony of d tress and remorse if through forgetfu ness, they ate a particle of meat on Friday in Lent. It is so much easier yield obedience in matters of observanc than in inward submission to God, th men always choose the outward a neglect the inward.

A Woman of Canaan. That is s belonged to the region where Christ th was. They habitua spoke of them as dogs. Mark descri this woman as a Greek an Syro-Phœnician, probably me ing that she spoke Greek and longed to that branch of t Phœnician race which had s tled in Syria, when the ot branch, known as Liby-Phœ cians, settled in Africa. Wi Moffatt went among the chuanas, he visited a Dut farmer, who, learning that was a preacher, asked him conduct family prayer. Mof willingly consented, and as the farmer to send for his w people. The farmer called in his white help, but when Mof told him to bring in the nativ too, he said, "What is the u They have no souls." While symptoms, as described by Lu who was a physician, were th of epileptic insanity, it is evid that the people believed the tims to be under the powe evil spirits, and Christ sha their opinion. It is remarka that even at the present day same belief survives in Orie lands. It is related a professor in a great university that p ing through the servants quarters he ca upon a boy who was employed to sh the students' shoes and run errands. boy was intent upon a book and the p fessor knowing that he ought to be at work instead of reading and suppos that it was a dime novel that so interes him laid hands on the book. Solomon gave a full-length portrait of aged man. By striking figures of speech, set forth his trembling and decrepit- e, and then comes to describe the hiteness of his locks by the blossoming the almond tree. It is the master-touch the picture, for I see in that one sen- nce, writes Dr. Talmage, not only the ap- earance of the hair, but an announcement the beauty of old age. The white locks a bad man are but the gathered frosts the second death, but "a hoary head is crown of glory," if it be found in the way f righteousness. There may be no color the cheek, no lustre in the eye, no spring the step, no firmness in the voice, and et around the head of every old man hose life has been upright and Chris- an there hovers a glory brighter than ver shook in the white tops of the almond- tree. If the voice quiver, it is because God is changing it into a tone fit for the celestial choral. If the back stoop, it is only because the body is just about to lie down in peaceful sleep. If the hand tremble, it is because God is unloosing it from worldly disappointments to clasp it on ringing harp and waving palm. If the hair has turned, it is only the gray light of heaven's dawn streaming through the scant locks. If the brow, once adorned by a luxuriance of auburn or raven, is smitten with baldness, it is only because God is preparing a place to set the everlasting crown. The falling of this aged Christian's staff will be the signal for the heavenly gate to swing open. The scattering of the almond blossoms will only discover the setting of the fruit. Elijah's flaming equipage was too tame for this ascending spirit. The arms of Jesus are grander than bounding horses of fire!

A Little Boy who Sang for Cuba.

Walter C. Frank, a bright little lad of Chatham, Pa., has sent a gift of money to the fund, "so that some poor little boys in Cuba may get something to eat." He raised the money by singing to his friends the verses of the well-known hymn:

> I think when I read that sweet story of old
> When Jesus was here among men.

Walter's singing bore fruit, and some of the little famine sufferers in Cuba will have cause to bless the little American lad whose sweet notes were coined into bread for them.

New York's Doll Show.

Three years ago, the idea of a model doll show was first suggested in New York City and met with considerable favor. This week the metropolis is in the midst of the third exhibition of the kind. All the proceeds are given to charity, and many of the leading philanthropic ladies of the city are among the patronesses. One of the most interesting features is an apartment house for women, modern in all its appointments, is regarded by competent judges as a safe investment, requiring only an initial undertaking to lead to many others. The estimated available tenantry for such buildings is not less than fifty thousand women.

Kites and Birds.

Scientists who have been manipulating large kites, in relating many amusing observations, tell us that large birds are always interested in the strange devices floating in the air, and cannot quite make them out. Prompted by curiosity, they hover around the kites and subject themselves to the danger of entanglement in the string. No bird, however, has alighted on a kite or attacked one. While one scientist was flying a train of five kites, a large, silver-tipped eagle came suddenly out of the higher air and swooped round and round the kite, looking against the sunset sky like a huge silver ball. As the train of kites was pulled in, the eagle followed, visiting one kite and then another. Another experience was had with a stork that came from the New Jersey side of the Hudson and flew straight for the queer object in the air. He apparently had made up his mind to go straight through it, but changed and dived underneath. He went around and above it, and through a glass it could be seen that he cocked his eye at the intruder in a most comical manner. While kites were high in the air, one March, flocks of geese flying in the V-wedge passed over. They stopped, broke up and hovered above the queer object, and at last slowly re-formed and flew away. Small birds of the air will alight on the string holding the kite and sway to and fro.

Polygamy in Africa.

The most difficult problem, we are told, that meets the European missionary dealing with South African tribes is that of polygamy. So says the Bishop of Bloemfontein, whose diocese extends over Basutoland, the Orange Free State, British Bechuanaland, and Griqualand west. It is gratifying to note that missionaries in South Africa present a solid front against this evil. The Bishop says: "Were it not for polygamy, the task of the Christian missionary would be comparatively easy; although I do not, perhaps, go so far as some missionaries, who maintain that if only some concessions concerning this matter could be made, the whole Basuto nation would speedily become Christian, at least in name. This point has never been considered for we are all agreed that we can enter into no truce with polygamy.

An Ideal Home.

The most perfect little home I ever saw, wrote Helen Hunt Jackson, was a little house into the sweet incense of whose fires went no costly things. A thousand dollars served as a year's living for father, mother, and three children. But the mother was the creator of a home: her relations with the children were the most beautiful I have ever seen; every inmate of the house involuntarily looked into her face for the keynote of the day; and it always rang clear. From the rose-bud or clover-leaf which, in spite of her hard housework, she always found time to put beside our plates at breakfast, down to the story she had on hand to read in the evening, there was no intermission of her influence. She has always been and always will be my ideal of a mother, wife, and home-maker. If to her quick brain, loving heart, and exquisite face had been added the appliances of wealth and enlargements of wide culture, hers would have been absolutely the ideal home. As it was, it was the best I have ever seen.

THE ANGELS CAME TO TOWN.

PEOPLE tell the story yet,
With the pathos of regret,
How, along the streets one day,
Unawares, from far away,
Angels passed, with gifts for need,
And no mortal gave them heed.
They had cheer for those who weep;
They had light for shadows deep.
Balm for broken hearts they bore,
Rest, deep rest, a boundless store;
But the people, so they say,
Went the old, blind, human way,
Fed the quack and hailed the clown,
When the angels came to town.

It has been and will be so.
Angels come and angels go,
Opportunity and light,
'Twixt the morning and the night,
With their messages divine
To your little world and mine,
And we wonder why we heard
Not a whisper of their word,
Caught no glimpse of finer grace
In the passing form and face,
That our ears were dull as stones
To the thrill of spirit tones,
And we looked not up, but down,
When the angels came to town.

ALFRED J. HOUGH.

A BLIND BOY GRADUATE.

FRANZ JOSEPH DOHMEN, of Austin, Texas, ranks above any of his fellow-students of the present senior class of the University of Texas. At the next commencement he will receive the degree of Bachelor of Literature. The fact that Franz is the first "honor man" of his class is only remarkable because since his tenth year he has been totally blind. He is twenty-four years old, and was born at New Braunfels, Texas, of German parents. His father, Dr. Dohmen, was at the time of his death the State oculist, and one of the most distinguished men of his profession in the State. When young Dohmen was ten years old he was seized with an attack of typhoid fever which settled in his eyes, and when his strength was restored it was found that he had completely lost his sight. His fondness for study and his natural musical taste have apparently afforded him ample recompense for the loss of his sight. He was placed in the Blind Asylum and there had his talents for music developed, and at the same time received splendid preparatory training for his university career. While he was studying in the Blind Asylum he received training in the system of writing for the blind. He is a master of this system and writes it rapidly. He comes to the university daily with his note-book, attends class, takes notes, and goes about the building so easily and naturally that the loss of his sight is scarcely noticed. When a term examination occurs he writes his answers to the questions according to his short-hand system for the blind, and then takes his replies home and makes a neat copy himself upon his typewriter. He does his typewritten work rapidly and neatly, and presents to his professors manuscript faultless in its appearance, and almost flawless as to its scholarly diction.

He was graduated from the Blind Asylum in 1893 with the highest honors, and has now been a student of the University of Texas for five years. His proficiency as a performer on the piano is a great solace both to himself and friends, but his greatest delight consists in delving in the problems of higher mathematics, philosophy, and political science. He speaks and writes English, German and French, is a fair Latin scholar, and knows a smattering of Greek. Mr. Dohmen is rather tall. His face is refined and pleasingly intelligent. His disposition is bright and cheerful. He is an illustration of what a bright, resolute young lad can accomplish.

A CHRISTIAN'S REST.

WHERE'ER my thoughts may wander,
'Mid clouds, on earth, o'er flood,
Or where I soar or ponder,
In every place is God.

I fear, I weep, I tremble,
I'm weak and sinful too,
I hear a voice that tells me
"Cheer up child, I love you."

It thrills among the ether,
Fills space and earth and flood,
It comes from Calvary's hilltop:
It is the voice of God.

Gospel Work in Virgin Fields.

Rev. Thomas Lain Tells how the American Sunday School Union is Planting Schools in Texas, Arkansas, and the Indian Territory.

NOT until the day of final account, when the King reckoneth with his servants, will it be known how much our land is indebted to the devoted men whom the American Sunday School Union sends into newly settled districts, to organize Sunday Schools. In thousands of villages and scattered communities there was no religious observance, no respect for the Lord's Day, no sound of public prayer and praise, until one of these godly men made his appearance and gathered the children together to hear the story of the Cross. From the small beginning of twenty or thirty children meeting in a schoolhouse, or a barn, or under the shade of a great tree, have proceeded influences which have affected every household and have transformed the lives of children and adults. Very often the school has developed into a church and men and women have gathered in Christian fellowship, who for long years, had forgotten the God of their fathers and the duties they had learned in the pious homes of their childhood.

REV. THOS. LAIN.

One of these missionaries who has just received his twenty first commission from the Union recently visited the offices of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and told a thrilling story of his twenty years of labor. He has been working in Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, and the Indian Territory, and has succeeded in organizing 718 schools, in which there have been 35,642 scholars and 3,231 teachers.

Forty years ago one of the schools organized in Northeastern Missouri by the saintly Stephen Paxton, had for its superintendent Mr. A. M. Lain, one of the good, radical, progressive characters who are to be found in all our young communities, full of activity and energy which make them the leaders in all public movements. Trained among the hard shell Baptists, and converted under the preaching of a Methodist minister, he put into his religion the energy of his business life. He was a Prohibitionist, a Free soiler, and an extreme man in everything he took up, self educated, a hard worker, and an intense patriot. Mr. Lain died in 1861, leaving a young family to struggle along on his farm under the joint care of his widow and his brother.

Thomas, the eldest son, then a boy of twelve years, worked on the farm, and as the years passed and his younger brothers were able to take his place, he went to the State of Texas and in other directions where work could be obtained. His father had taken care that he should be well drilled in Sunday School lore. The lessons and all that pertained to them had been his curriculum, and his secular education was obtained in the public schools of his native town of Louisiana, Mo. He became a teacher and taught a district school in his native state for a period of three years.

Wherever he was at work, the Sunday found him in the nearest Sunday-school, and if there was no Sunday-school within easy reach, Thomas Lain made it his business to organize one. He generally served as superintendent until his occupation called him to another locality, when he would leave the work in the hands of the best man who was available as his successor.

Mr. W. H. Gill, who had charge of the American Sunday-School Union's evangelistic work in Northern Texas, visited young Mr. Lain and finally persuaded him to enter the service of the Union as a missionary.

Mr. Lain became an enthusiast in his work, and as he saw how invariably beneficial effects followed when a Sunday School was established in a community, he exerted himself to introduce them wherever there was opportunity. Sometimes a great deal of tact was needed to induce the citizens to consent to the innovation. In one district where he tried to organize a school, he was repeatedly referred to one man who was evidently the ruling spirit in the community. Mr. Lain went to his house and stated his business. The man was at work at a distant part of the farm, but his wife was at home, and she promptly assured the missionary that there was not the slightest hope of getting his consent. He was violently opposed, she said, to religion in any form, and especially to preachers. She begged that Mr. Lain would not attempt to see him, as he would have to endure insult and hard words. The missionary, however, made his way to the field, where the man, with his two sons, was hard at work under the blazing sun hoeing cotton. He stated his business briefly, but the man told him gruffly that he was too busy to spend time talking to preachers. He went on with his work, and Mr. Lain took the hoe from the hand of one of the tired boys and followed him across the field working as fast as he did. At the end of the row he turned and was astonished to see his visitor, hoe in hand at his heels. "Well" he said, in amazement, "you do know how to handle a hoe," and he held out his hand and gave the missionary a hearty grasp. Finding that he had won the man's respect, he presented again the object of his visit and found him willing to listen. It turned out that the man himself had once been a preacher, but an unhappy experience had set him against religion. Mr. Lain talked with him and finally persuaded him to attend the meeting he had arranged for the organization of the school. He kept his promise and made a speech in favor of the project. They made him superintendent of the school, and he proved a most efficient officer. From that time on he was a changed man, and no one heard him say a word against religion. "It took an hour's hard work," Mr. Lain says, "to hoe that row, and my hands were badly blistered before it was done; but it was by far the most profitable hour's work I ever did."

One incident, which shows how God protects his servants by apparently ordinary circumstances, occurred during Mr. Lain's early labors in Texas. In a small town, where he was trying to establish a school, he met a doctor, who had made himself conspicuous by opposing the project. The doctor, recognizing him, began a bitter attack on religion and preachers. Some of his charges were so obviously a distortion of facts that Mr. Lain remarked, "You are talking from prejudice, not from reason." The doctor chose to regard the remark as an insult and told Mr. Lain he would be sorry for it. He paid little attention to the threat at the time, but a few weeks afterward, meeting the doctor again, he learned that he had been in more danger than he knew. "You came near paying dearly for that remark of yours the other day," said the doctor. "I made up my mind to teach you a lesson in politeness. I went to a friend of mine named Mr. L——, who has always stood by me ever since the days of the war, and asked him to help me get even with you. To my surprise, Mr. L—— refused, and told me a story about you which has changed my opinion of you. It seems that some time ago, when he was working on the Cotton Belt Railroad in Arkansas, he was taken sick, and you went to him, and finding him all alone, you nursed him, and when he was well enough to move, helped him to reach his friends. He has never forgotten the service you rendered him, and he told me plainly that he hoped, for his sake, I would do nothing to injure you. I stand by him still, so you owe it to your doing him that service long ago, that I did not fulfil my threat." Mr. Lain was not aware that his friend was in the neighborhood, and had almost forgotten the circumstances narrated, but he was very thankful that in looking for an ally, the doctor should have gone to a man who had so good a memory for past kindnesses.

"We sometimes find a difficulty," Mr. Lain says, "in getting a place to meet at first, but we always find a way to overcome it. I remember one district we we unable to get room in a school house or barn or in any building, so we held t meeting in a grove under the shade of big tree. We had an enthusiastic me ing, and organized a school. The ve next day there were men at work choppi down some of the trees, and they soon h a log cabin built, in which the school m At Pecos City on the western border started in a vacant store. I arrived the on a Saturday evening and went to a ho for the night. I asked at the hotel there was any one in the neighborho who professed to be a Christian. I w referred to a lawyer, and after getting little supper, I went out to find the la yer. He was delighted to hear the p pose of my visit and entered enthusia cally into my plans. He insisted on taki me over to see a pious couple at so distance who, he said, would be glad know about it. There was no sch house, but there was a vacant store, a the lawyer thought he could persuade owner to let us have it. He was resolv to begin right away, so he hunted up owner, who consented, saying he wo like to have the new store dedicated, a we had a very good meeting and a th ing school was established."

About three and a half years ago L Lain began work in the Indian Territ among the five civilized tribes. He w up the Arkansas River to a place ca Broken Arrow where the Indians were camped for their annual green corn dan He made the acquaintance of several fluential chiefs there, but his efforts make arrangements with them for org izing Sunday Schools in their towns w defeated by the whiskey peddlers w contrary to law were making the n drunk. SORROW AT THE BOWERY MISSION.

Sunday Morning Conflagration Visits the Dormitories and Eleven Inmates Perish—"Tried As by Fire."

THE readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who have been interested in the work of the Bowery Mission, will learn with sorrow that a fire, which resulted in the loss of eleven lives, occurred in the dormitories of the Mission early in the morning of Sunday, March 13th. How it originated remains a mystery; but it was probably due to carelessness on the part of some inmate. Every precaution against fire has always been taken by the managers of the Bowery Mission, and the building is abundantly supplied with fire-escapes in front and rear, readily accessible from the windows on every floor. A night-watchman was in charge, and he made his rounds hourly, visiting the different floors, walking through the dormitories and inspecting every room and corridor carefully less than half an hour before the fire broke out. The flames were confined to the three upper stories and, fortunately, were discovered in time to allow of the escape of almost all the inmates. A few, who were probably stupified by the dense smoke, failed to reach the windows, and they were found by the police and firemen, quite dead, and some of the bodies badly charred by the flames. A number of the inmates saved only their night clothing, and were supplied with garments by the Mission Superintendent, John H. Wyburn, who was at his post, striving heroically to save life.

This sad occurrence has naturally cast a gloom over the Bowery Mission, which has stood for so many years as a Gospel Lighthouse on the Bowery that has become, in a measure a national landmark. During the two decades of its existence thousands of sinners have been led into the light of the Gospel in its Mission Chapel, and its converts are to be found in almost every country on the globe. Multitudes of homeless and destitute men, weary and sick of sin, have found welcome and grateful shelter within its walls. Former criminals, too, have dated their change to a better life from the hour they first entered the Mission. It has sent forth a gallant army of Gospel-bearers to many parts of our own land, and its spiritual influence has been far-reaching. Mrs. Bird, "The Mother of the Bowery Boys," whose life is consecrated to missionary work among the sons of the densely-peopled east side, has held her weekly meetings in the Mission Hall and there gathered in a harvest of souls. The "Converts' Meetings," held every Sunday afternoon under Superintendent Wyburn's leadership, have also been a wondrous spiritual factor in the Mission's work, and every week has brought hundreds of special requests for prayer from far and near to be laid before the Lord in supplication by that little Sunday gathering of converts. During the last three years or more, since the Mission came under the control of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, its field has broadened and expanded, and its energies have been multiplied. It has fed the hungry, clothed the naked, and ministered to the sick. Its Free Dispensary has been a means of blessing to thousands of sufferers. No friendless waif has ever been turned from the hospitable doors, or denied food and shelter. It has brought a new and intensely practical interpretation to mission-work and has ceaselessly labored for the bodily and spiritual uplifting of the lowest section of "God's Poor," with whom it came into daily contact.

This sad disaster, with its burden of sorrow, is the sorest trial the Bowery Mission has ever experienced. The Mission has literally been "tried as by fire." But, from the ashes of this experience, there arise hopes of a deeper consecration, a richer desire for service, and a stronger resolve to devote more and more the whole energies of the Mission and its leaders to the winning of souls. Life is uncertain, and the summons which suddenly called away these eleven human beings may come with equal suddenness to any of us. There are occasions when all human precautions seem futile, and when nothing but the knowledge of being upborne in the arms of a gracious God can allay the fears that fill the soul and bring dismay to the heart.

Dr. Klopsch, who is now in Cuba, was informed of the fire by cable, and the following sympathetic message was cabled by him in reply:

"HAVANA, March 14.

"The terrible disaster at the Bowery Mission makes my heart bleed. I would return immediately, but with thousands dying around me, my duty is here.

"LOUIS KLOPSCH."

All the funeral arrangements were undertaken by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, under whose auspices the Bowery Mission has been conducted for the last three years. The last sad rites will soon be performed and the dead laid to rest. Soon all the evidence of the fire will have disappeared and the Mission will have resumed its work among the east-side multitudes; but the memory of those whose spirits went up to God on that Sabbath morning will never be forgotten. The Superintendent of the Mission and his associates request the prayers of our readers, that they may be sustained in their bereavement, that their hands and hearts may be strengthened for future service, and that a greater zeal, a deeper devotion, and a fuller consecration, may follow as a result of their "trial by fire."

MISSION HOUSE ON THE NIGER.

NATIVES BEFORE THE PALACE OF THE KING OF LOKOJA ON THE NIGER.

War Clouds in Africa.

For many weeks past Europe has been watching with intense interest, developments in the struggle between France and England for commercial supremacy in the Niger country. Recently the excitement was intensified by the news that a French corps, composed of both whites and natives, had invaded British territory in the Borgu and Gambara countries, north of Lagos, and in the "Hinterland," back of Ashanti and the Gold Coast, and even as far as the native kingdom of Sokoto, beyond the left bank of the Niger River. The territory to which Britain lays claim is said to be well-defined by official maps. On the other hand, France denies that the sphere of British influence includes those countries beyond the ninth degree of north latitude and west of the Niger. French expeditions have thereupon been sent to occupy the native towns of Nikki, Boussa on the Niger, Kiama and Boria, at which last-mentioned place they met a party under British command, and called upon it to haul down the British flag. There was a guard of Haussa soldiers, with a non-commissioned officer, at Boria, and the removal of the flag was refused. On an other occasion, at Wae, a place to the north of Ashanti and Cape Coast Castle, claimed to be within the limits of British territory, a French captain, with about sixty native soldiers, established a post, notwithstanding formal protest, and, at a later date, four French officers, with a hundred men, arrived at Argungu, in the kingdom of Sokoto. These occurrences, happening in rapid succession were the occasion of much diplomatic correspondence. It is not beyond a probability that the Niger country, which has enjoyed a season of peace, may again be the scene of a bitter struggle for mastery between two invading nations, whose messenger first came among them in the name of a Christian civilization.

New York's Great Revival.

Incidents of the Moody Meetings at the Grand Central Palace.

VAST crowds attended the revival meetings at the Grand Central Palace, New York, that were conducted by Mr. D. L. Moody, the well-known evangelist. Many remarkable things were said by Mr. Moody himself and by the other speakers also. We devote space to some of the more striking passages from the great evangelist's addresses:

CHRISTIAN FAITH.

"I never saw any one who was without faith that good would come from such a meeting as this who could do any good work himself. More harm is done by Christian people predicting defeat than by those who are not Christians. If you don't believe that something is to be accomplished here, retire at once, and be assured that if you believe truly that good not only can come, but will come of these meetings, the good will be done. Was ever a city darker than Jerusalem before the Day of Pentecost, or Babylon when Daniel went there. There is a great difference between believing that God can use you, and believing that God will use you. Bring all the influence to bear on your friends that you possibly can, and if you have faith that your efforts surely will have fruit, they will be successful. There were many in the army of the Israelites who believed that God could help them to slay Goliath; but David not only believed that, but also believed that God would help him, and so he went forth and slew the giant. Out of the twelve spies who were sent by Joshua, from the twelve tribes, to view the Promised Land, ten reported that it was a land flowing with milk and honey, but there were giants in it also; but two said that there might be giants, but they were not afraid of them: God would help his people to conquer. We know the names of those two out of the twelve. They were Caleb and Joshua. But who knows the names of the others?

BRING MEN TO CHRIST.

"Bring men to Christ. That is what we want. I don't know anything that will scare a New York man more than to have four men after him. If you know a man who has not been to church in twenty years, four of you go after him and bring him here. To the first man he will say: 'What! Go and hear that old mountebank? No, indeed.' But by the time the fourth man arrives he will weaken, and you will get him. I would rather preach to that man than to the old bald-headed man who has sat in the fourth pew for twenty-five years and what he heard rolled off him like oil off marble. If you will get up and go at it Christ can be preached to all in New York before the end of the week. If you will work we can have the grandest meeting ever held in this city."

WILLING TO SAVE.

"I am of those who believe that swearers, thieves, gamblers, drunkards, rumsellers and Sabbath-breakers are lost. I don't believe that some of them would want to go to heaven. The Bible sense of lost is 'out of God's way.' They have lost their way in this dark work. Christ comes to break their fetters, to set them free. He did not come to condemn the world, but to save. He will seek them out. He is a seeking Saviour. Do you think there is a man or woman here to-night whom he has never sought? Many of you have had good fathers and mothers. Was not Christ seeking you through them? Many of you have been appealed to by ministers. Christ was speaking to you through them."

LONG-DRAWN PRAYERS.

"I get tired of some people trying to pray who begin with long preambles by telling God how good and great and wise and infinite he is, and then maybe don't have anything to ask for in the prayer at all. No archbishop could have made a better prayer than that of blind Bartimæus. And, like as not, it was his first. Pray to-night in the same way for God's spirit on this mission. Let that cry, "Lord, that I may receive my sight!" go to heaven to-night. The answer will come before I get through preaching."

NO INTRODUCTION NEEDED.

"It isn't often that a rich man will climb a tree to look at a passing prophet. Christ saw him and called him by his name, telling him that he would sup with him that night. Zaccheus must have said to himself: 'Now, I wonder who ever told Jesus of Nazareth my name?' But no introduction was ever necessary to Jesus. He knows the names of all of you here to-night, and where you live, and he knows your hearts and minds better than you know them yourselves."

"WHERE ART THOU?"

"Twenty-two years ago to-night was one of the happiest nights of my life. I was in New York, down in the Hippodrome, the same place where the Madison Square Garden is now. I preached a sermon from the text 'Where Art Thou?' A man had gambled and drank the night before. He had gambled away some of his employer's money. He saw a crowd going into the Hippodrome, and went in with the others. When I gave the text, 'Where Art Thou?' he got angry. He thought it was addressed only to him personally, and wanted to know whose business it was as to where he was. Again I asked the question 'Where Art Thou?' and the man put on his hat and started for the door. He went out, but he came back. That man was converted the same night. To-day he is one of our best workers, one of the brightest stars of the work here in New York. I like to stand here in New York again to-day and say that it is the same old Gospel."

A great many requests for special prayer were received daily. One morning brought the following:

Twenty-five for sons, 8 for daughters, 10 for their children, 9 for grandchildren, 8 for husbands, 7 for brothers, 4 for sisters, 1 for his father, 6 for backsliders, 10 for intemperate relatives, 9 for pastors and churches, 2 for Sunday school teachers and classes and 98 other requests.

Our Life-Saving Mission in Cuba.

DR. KLOPSCH AND MISS BARTON WRITE OF THE EFFORTS TO RESCUE THE SKELETON POPULATION.

Urging Forward the Relief Work in the Face of Personal Peril—Tiny Living Skeletons from Los Fossos—"The Christian Herald" Orphanage—Graphic Pictures of Suffering.

OUR mail this week has been freighted with news from Cuba that is at once both cheering and sad—cheering because it tells of the glorious life-saving work that is being accomplished among the famine sufferers by our devoted Relief Fund workers, and sad as affording a glimpse of the frightful and wretched misery that still exists unrelieved in many parts of that unhappy island. We give the brighter side of the story first. The letters from Miss Barton and Dr. Klopsch afford cause for sincere gratitude that the work of the Fund is making such excellent progress. Miss Barton writes as follows:

To The Christian Herald:

It was half-past four on the morning of March 2 that Dr. Hubbell, Mr. Elwell, one or two guests and myself met Senator Proctor and Col. M. M. Parker, of Washington, at the ferry and station for Matanzas. This is one of the large cities of the Island of Cuba, having some fifty thousand of its own inhabitants, among whom have been concentrated eight to ten thousand strangers to exist helplessly in enforced idleness for nearly two years.

Our good-hearted consul, Mr. Brice, seemed to dread to show us the worst they had, and conducted us hesitatingly to the four hospitals for concentrados, a mile or two away from the center of the town.

The Governor, a royal Cuban and a new appointee of Captain General Blanco, with warm heart and polished manner, had no hesitancy in welcoming us to his elegant mansion, and in bringing his wife, mother and sister to assist in receiving and to bid us welcome to all they had to offer or that we could desire. The half hour's seance in that polished marble saloon, with its spacious elegance, the deep feeling of the Governor, the still deeper sympathy of the ladies, whose daily lives are given to the poor sufferers about them, was a scene not to be forgotten.

As we drove out of the town we halted for a short call at the municipal hospitals, generally attended by sisters of charity; scantily provided, it is true, but well cared for. Generally a little is paid by, or for, each patient per week, that helps to keep up the general fund. Our welcome by the sisters was most cordial.

A mile further on we came to the four hospitals, where nothing was paid, and it is scarcely too much to say nothing is had. There were between one hundred and two hundred men, women, and children in all stages of hunger and disease; there were more than this number of empty beds that could be thrice filled from the huts and hovels outside, but the hospital authorities feared to take in more lest they perish with hunger from their inability to feed them.

Our visit has been one of inspection; returning to Havana by the afternoon train. The train of next morning took to Matanzas supplies of cereal foods, milk, rice, meat, canned, meats, fish, malted milk, flour, tomatoes, canned vegetables and soap, more than enough to fill three baggage cars for the prospective shipment from New York direct to Matanzas steamer.

The hospital committee and surgeons are organized to work under my charge, and begging that one of our Red Cross men be temporarily assigned to assist in their distribution we turned our steps toward Havana with a thankfulness unspeakable in our hearts, for the great chief of our country who had asked the food the great hearted people who had given it: the efficient committee who had organized and sent it, and the generous and tireless workers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, whose gifts faithfully come to us with the injunction—"Use our money; tell us the needs; we send more."

CLARA BARTON.

Another letter from Miss Barton describes the new American National Red Cross Orphanage, recently opened, the funds for which were supplied by our generous readers. She writes:

"The streets and the huts around this great city literally swarm with orphans—the children of reconcentrados. The father, perhaps, has fallen in the ranks or dies of illness. The mother with her helpless little ones, driven from home, shelterless, foodless, friendless, succumbed to the conditions; and one day these little ones found themselves, or, rather, were found, alone and unknown in this great hard world, to make their way unprotected to the life before them, or to an early death.

Attention was first called to this property

THE U. S. DISPATCH BOAT "FERN" LOADING WITH RELIEF SUPPLIES FOR MATANZAS.

The "Fern" was hailed with joy at Matanzas, where there are some 25,000 starving reconcentrados. She also visited Sagua la Grande, delivered quantities of supplies and relieved many sufferers there.

on Saturday morning, February twenty-seventh: at night the contract was made and signed, and the orphans had a home. Put this down to the account of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. On Sunday, next day "Tell it not in Gath," and Oh, HERALD! forgive us, if, rather than saunter about the streets hungry, a few men earned a few dollars on its stained glass windows, frescoed walls and marble floors. On Monday (next day) seventy-five new cots, blankets, pillows and sheets adorned its spacious rooms. On Tuesday, March first, Mrs. Dr. Lesser, our "Sister Bettina" of the New York Red Cross Hospital, and who had, and has, superintendence of the entire charge, made the last necessary outfit. The food and medicines were sent from the great Relief Fund warehouse, to its well stocked store-room, and thirty-four sick suffering starvelings were at once selected from Los Fossos, for the first birds in the nest, and the American Consul-General came, with uplifted eyes to witness the sudden realization of his dream.

CLARA BARTON.

From Dr. Klopsch we have this equally encouraging letter, which our friends will read with deep interest:

HAVANA, Cuba, March 9.

After a most delightful trip of four days, we visited Morro Castle this afternoon at 2.30, and within a few minutes thereafter dropped anchor in the harbor of Havana. About twenty small sailing vessels immediately made a bee-line for the Vigilancia, and the various crews shouted up to the passengers on the deck, offering their services to take them to the shore, half a mile away. The drummers for the various hotels came aboard, and after arranging with one of them for the care of our luggage, we descended into the boat pointed out for us, hoisted the sail, and off we started for the port, passing on the way the wreck of the Maine, which was being taken apart, her two smoke-stacks, crushed and broken, lying on the deck of the wrecking vessel, to be transported to Key West. We also passed the cruiser Montgomery, and in passing gave three hearty cheers for the gallant American tars, to which they heartily responded. The Vizcaya came next, and then the dock where we alighted, passing the scrutinizing gaze of the port physician.

On the pier we were met by Miss Barton and Dr. Hubbell, who cordially greeted us, expressing the greatest gratification at our visit, and offering us the hospitality of the home of the Red Cross in Cuba. Having already engaged accommodations at the Inglaterra, we were compelled for the time being to decline, but promised at a later day to avail ourselves of the invitation. Then we passed through the custom-house with ease, nothing dutiable being found in our trunks. When finally our trunks were locked, we drove to the hotel and arranged for our apartments.

As soon as the arrangements were completed, Miss Barton and Dr. Hubbell appeared and a conference of nearly two hours followed, in the course of which Miss Barton explained in detail the work that had already been accomplished and her plans for the future. The people at the hotel, Americans, Spaniards and Cubans, all speak of Miss Barton's work in terms of highest praise. Miss Barton is busy, morning, noon and night, and since her arrival in Cuba a month ago she has not averaged more than four hours' sleep a night. To-morrow I shall visit Los Fossos, which under her able management has been transformed from a veritable pest-hole into a comparative heaven. I shall also see the Orphan Asylum which General Lee inaugurated, and which is now under the management of Miss Barton.

Thirty-five tiny skeletons were transferred to-day from Los Fossos to this orphanage, and it is hoped that everyone of these emaciated little ones, by careful, tender and loving nursing, will be saved from the death to which but for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers' generosity, they seemed inevitably doomed.

After Miss Barton's departure, accompanied by Mrs. Klopsch, I called on Consul-General Lee, by whom we were warmly welcomed, and who promised his hearty co-operation. Then back to hotel. Here at dinner nearly every one of the representatives of American newspapers called to pay their respects, and gave us some very valuable suggestions, which will prove exceedingly helpful in the mission that brought us here.

To-morrow morning, at eight o'clock I am to meet Mr. Guzman, who represents Gen. Lee on the Distributing Committee, and then I shall go to the Orphanage, which I will start for Matanzas, Jaruco and Sagua. Traveling is rather dangerous, and but very few will trust their lives to the railroads, but when Americans are on board insurgents do not interfere. The 70 tons of supplies arrived this morning at Key West on the Mallory steamer, and the United States vessel Fern left the harbor to take them to Matanzas and Sagua before the cablegram announcing the arrival of the cargo at Key West reached me, hence I could not go over in time to accompany her. Havana is quiet, and the people are awaiting with much interest the report of the Inquiry Commission. I feel sure that in any event we will not be molested. At the hotels we are constantly besieged by little, starving children to give them a few coppers. At least twenty appealed to us in about ten minutes.

LOUIS KLOPSCH.

Stories of suffering continue to come from many prominent Americans, now visiting in Cuba, among whom are United States Senators Gallinger and Proctor and Colonel M. Parker. The latter says the distress in the island is immeasurably greater than even the American press has pictured it. The accounts so heartrending that many shrink from reading them. At one place where concentrados were herded he saw three men during his brief visit of a few minutes.

United States Senator Gallinger gives at great length the ghastly story of the wretchedness of the herds of "suffering, starving unfortunates." Cuba, he says, is literally a place of beggary and death, of starving men and women with their sick, emaciated children, gaunt in face, but with limbs swollen almost to the point of bursting.

On the cars I was told that in San Christobal one coach used as a hearse had carried to the cemetery Society in twenty-six days, while many more coffined dead were disposed of and in another little town not far from Matanzas, according to the testimony of the Mayor, every dog and cat in the town has been eaten and later desolation confronts the place unless relief comes soon.

The King's Daughters Sewing Circle at No. 17 Astor Place, New York, is doing excellent work in making garments for the destitute Cuban reconcentrados, and will make a large shipment this week. They appeal for contributions of cloth, muslin, calico, yarn, cotton and sheeting. Any gifts of this character, sent by merchants or manufacturers will be used to the best advantage.

Every contribution will be duly acknowledged in these columns. The early contributions to the Fund are published in this issue.

Putting in the Underpinning

Written especially for The Christian Herald by . . .

HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD

IT was always exasperating to Mrs. Bella that she was more or less cramped for money; particularly so when her somewhat generous and compassionate nature was aroused in behalf of others, and she found herself able to make various people happy in the way that money can often do.

She was not a particularly energetic person, in fact she was not at all energetic; and it never used to occur to her that there might be ways and means of accomplishing her desires if she had put herself at work instead of having put herself at nothing. So as she sat at home with her fancy-work, for which she had a pretty talent, she had to occupy her mind with what she called "building castles." And she really rather admired herself on account of the castles, because they were all such an unselfish order, showing her to herself as a tender-hearted person with no little sordid or mean in her composition. She did not fill the time wishing for a piece of old lace, although it would have looked beautiful across the front of her best gown and have made it as good as new. Oh! no; she knew it was impossible, and she didn't care very much for it, and never gave it a second thought; that would be such a waste of time, she said to herself.

But she would spend a whole morning in thinking what if, in some one of many various ways—she had a score of impossible improbabilities in mind—some one should leave her a fortune. Of course, it was in her inner consciousness that a certain portion of this fortune should be reserved for her own uses, and just as semi-consciously she knew that a great part of that would go in charities and beneficiencies of one sort or another, but she set it aside for future thinking out, and put nothing of it into words, even in thought. There were matters of more pressing interest to be considered. What she did put into words in her thought was that the first thing she would do with her money was to build her sister Laura the bay-window that she had always wanted so much, with which to enlarge their little parlor and have a winter-garden. There would have to be a stone foundation, Mrs. Bella planned, and plate-glass sides, and it would perhaps necessitate the re-painting of the whole end of the house; but she could do that for Laura, of course. And there would have to be a new carpet for the parlor; and getting a new carpet it might be worth while to have some new chairs and a new divan, of the same shade also—she hoped Laura would let her choose them of deep dull crimson selours, with big cushions—she should think Laura might, when she paid for them. Then she would get Laura a white wolf-skin rug, real, and a vase or two, bullocks-blood color, or would deep jewel-blue be better? And while one was about it, Laura really did need a new dining-table instead of that rickety old thing that shook if the tea were stronger than usual or if the bread were heavy; and which should it be, old oak or polished mahogany? Mahogany looked as if you had more than your share of grandmothers when it was bare, except for small delicate napkins and old silver and glass, and Laura would be so delighted if she could have her friends out from town to a pretty luncheon now and then. But if she did, she would have to have a new set of china, and half a dozen different sets of plates, and some bouillon-cups, and really some dressy silver articles; and she spent an hour fitting Laura out with the proper table accessories; and before she paused she had selected the company Laura was to ask, and had arranged the menu, and thought it wise to rehabilitate Laura's spare room, which had never been half finished, and had given Laura a charming new toilette that had made her look a pretty as she did when she was a girl. By that time, Mrs. Bella discovered that her barmecidal legacy was hardly large enough to cover the space over which she had spread it, and so she began again, and gave all the bequest to her husband, in her mind; and in her mind he went into business with it and quadrupled and octupled it.

And now she was able not only to do all she wanted to do for Laura, but even to put stained glass windows in the church and put in a new organ there and finish the tower; and she scalloped half one side of a centre-piece while she was giving a grand entertainment in the new parish-rooms of her providing, and making ready for the minister a purse of as many gold-pieces as the number of his years. And in this pleasant manner she beguiled her hours, building the castles in the air which floated before her like bubbles, one chasing another, and never troubling herself to put an underpinning into any of them.

One day her sister Laura sent for her to come up the hill. The electric road, whose building had made traveling so bad that she had not gone that way for some weeks, had just been opened. As she approached the house, something strange about it struck her. She could hardly believe her eyes. It was a bay-window; and it was full of flowers. "Yes," said Laura, meeting her at the door, "I've really mastered it at last! I wanted to surprise you. Aren't you surprised? I've been making a regular business, this good while of putting up jams and jellies and sweet-pickles, all out of our own garden, and sending them to the exchange in the city; and I've made enough out of it to have the bay-window built, that you wanted me to have, and to buy a new carpet, and drapery curtains, and a set of china! What do you say to that!"

"Oh!" cried Mrs. Bella. "I've been sitting at home dreaming, and you've been putting in the underpinning to my castles!"

But it didn't cure Mrs. Bella. She went on putting up her unsubstantial fabrics. To-day the money that came to her through the avenues of her dreams was to provide a Christmas-tree in the vestry, with a present on it for every child in the parish. And when Mrs. Morris came in and told her that she and Jennie Guild had made and sold pot-pourri enough from their roses to have a Christmas-tree, with a book for every boy in the Sunday School and a doll for every girl, she was not deterred from building another castle in the air because some one else had put in the underpinning of that one.

As I have said, she was a tender-hearted woman of generous impulses; it always had troubled her that the people of the town had to drink water which, there was little doubt, had something to do with the frequently fatal typhoid among them. One of her favorite castles in the air consisted of a laborious planning to bring down into the town the pure water of the boiling spring on the hill above their house, that now wasted itself in a marsh in another direction.

So, when she varied her dream of the wondrous legacy that was to enable her to do benefits, she imagined the same amount of money coming to her through fortunate enterprises, in which the very stars of heaven helped her, for in one of them she would find a remarkable aerolite fallen in her front yard, and would sell it to a rich institution; or in another she would find a vein of gold, or a buried treasure in the back yard. But she never went out to even look for the gold. And one day her husband and some of his friends climbed up and cleared out the spring, having made a rough calculation of the number of million gallons it ran; and, as they could spare the time, they dug a deep trench up the hill to the spring, and piped it. "Now," said her husband, "we have brought the water down so far; and here it is for the town to take it or leave it!" And Mrs Bella saw another underpinning put in place. She felt somewhat defrauded, but broke ground, or sky, for another castle straightway, in which she persuaded the town authorities to take the water. And she still goes on floating her airy castles; and now the habit has grown so inveterate, that as long as she lives some one else will always be putting in the underpinning.

"IT WAS A BAY WINDOW, AND IT WAS FULL OF FLOWERS."

The Power That Saves.

The Preciousness of Salvation from the Dominion of Sin (I. Peter 1: 18-21).

Whether in this passage the Apostle Peter was referring to salvation, in the sense in which the word is ordinarily used, may reasonably be doubted. Perhaps that idea may have been in his mind, but his words seem rather to imply a redemption from vain conversation, or, rather, as the Revised Version has it, redemption from a "vain manner of life." We sometimes see a young man inheriting suddenly a large fortune, and we wonder what he will do with it. He may enter the university and study to make himself a great statesman, or he may give himself to philosophy or literature, and having abundant means and leisure at his disposal, he may devote himself to the task of enlightening the world. A hundred ways exist in which a young man so circumstanced can turn his money and leisure to account. Relieved from the necessity, which maims and cripples so many lives, of spending the bulk of his time in a struggle for bread, he has a rare opportunity of benefiting his generation by word and work. But if a young man so situated became dissipated, if he proved frivolous and gave his time to amusement and pleasure, his fine opportunity would be wasted. What a glorious work it would be to redeem him from his vain manner of life and turn him in a new direction in which he might render service to the world!

How difficult such an achievement is, no one knows but he who has attempted it. When once the lower nature has assumed the control of the life, it seems as if nothing short of a miracle could redeem the victim from its power. Broken-hearted parents, sorrowing wives all over the world, are perplexed by this problem. How supremely important then is this statement of the Apostle! He speaks to people who have been redeemed, and reminds them of the means by which it was done. Not with silver or gold—we know that, for their failure in this matter has often been demonstrated—but with precious blood, even the blood of Christ. Here we have the secret. The power that Christ has acquired by giving himself to redeem men, accomplishes their redemption. We know that it is so, for instances of it are all around us. When the love of parents and wife, and children, and honor, and self-respect, and all the strongest levers we know of in morals, have failed, this succeeds. It gives to human nature the force that alone can overcome. It imparts the one essential element that it lacks. "Therefore we preach Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God."

THE CHRISTIAN'S IDEAL.

The Pattern for Believers. I. Timothy 1: 16; 4: 12; Titus 2: 7.

Conduct always occupies a prominent place in the pages of the New Testament. However much the modern church may emphasize the importance of correct creed and orthodoxy and insist that right living proceeds from right thinking, it cannot overlook the fact that Christ and his Apostles dwelt more on the duties of life and righteousness of conduct, than on soundness of belief. We know perfectly well that false principles will lead to false action, and therefore that it is essential to have the life founded on true doctrine, but the modern tendency is to be more severe on the heretic than the sinner. Perhaps some of the odium that attaches to the church and some of the prejudice existing in the world against the church, may be traced to this cause. The Christian ought to feel that the honor of the church is in his keeping and that Christ has the right to expect of him that his life shall be an embodiment of Christian principles. He is to be the light of the world. In his home, in his business and in his duties as a citizen he should so live that people can see Christianity in action. To do this it is necessary that he keep an ideal constantly before him. This ideal he finds in Christ.

It is one of the best evidences of the divinity of Christ that people separated from him by nineteen centuries and by all the differences between Western and Eastern life, can find inspiration from his example. Statesmen, judges, soldiers, merchants, fathers and mothers turn to that divine life and find help for their special duties, though Christ knew nothing by personal experience of their circumstances. The principles of brotherly love, kindness, magnanimity, unselfishness, concern for the welfare of others, sympathy with the poor and suffering—can all be translated into modern life and applied to the circumstances of men in every rank of society. To do in any conceivable circumstances as we believe Christ would have done in the same situation—that is to be a follower of Christ. In this way, his life may become real to the world. He rises again in the lives of his people, and the world may see, dimly and vaguely, as it observes those who bear his name what he was and is. The love and gentleness and patience and forbearance and compassion of his character should be perceived by the beauty of the reflection mirrored in the lives of his people.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor and editors, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

Faithful Korean Christians.

How they Labored and Pinched to Build Themselves a Church Home in Seoul.

RUSSIA seems to be playing much the same role in Korea as Japan did during the latter part of 1895. The Imperial body-guards are drilled by Russian instructors, and the whole army has acquired Russian tactics. Russia-Korean commerce is being pushed, and it has been announced that the Greek Orthodox Church will be established. And quite overstepping any former Japanese regime, Mr. Alexieff, a high Russian official, has been engaged as Chief Adviser of the National Finance Department for an unlimited time, and with the agreement that men of no other nationality beside Russian or Korean shall be appointed to this post. A fleet of ten English men-of-war, commanded by Admiral Buller, are at present in the harbor of Chemulpo. The political outlook for Korea another year is uncertain.

CHURCH BUILT BY NATIVE CHRISTIANS, SEOUL.

One of the recent events of a hopeful nature in Korea is the completion of a beautiful white granite Independence Arch, built by the Independence Club. This club was organized in 1896 by some progressive Koreans at the suggestion of Dr. Philip Jaisolm, a born Korean, but a naturalized American, and the talented editor of the first Korean newspaper. The club is popular, and many prominent Korean officials are among its members. It is not political, but rather educational and social. It holds weekly debates, and as a result of a recent debate upon the subject of slavery, at least 100 slaves received their freedom.

The first Protestant church in foreign architecture built in Korea for native worshipers was dedicated Dec. 26, with impressive ceremonies. It is Gothic in style, 70 feet long, 40 feet wide; the tower is about 50 feet high, and there are two class-rooms, 28x14 feet. The entire cost of this beautiful church, with furnishings, is 8,500 yen. It is to be known as the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Seoul. Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Baldwin were expected at the dedicatory service, and their absence was a great disappointment; but aside from this the very interesting programme prepared by the pastor, Rev. H. G. Appenzeller, was successfully carried out, and in behalf of the trustees, Rev. D. Bunker, Miss Josephine O. Paine, Mr. Wo, Mr. Long, and Mr. Han, the pastor presented the new church to the superintendent of the mission, Rev. W. B. Scranton, M. D.

Soon after the new church began to be talked about Teresa, a native sister, met Miss Rothweiler in the street one day and said: "Here is 500 cash towards this work." Miss Rothweiler was surprised at the amount, knowing that the family had a hard time to obtain a livelihood. But the woman explained that since she had first heard about the new church, every time she had put the rice on to boil, she had saved out a handful until it had come to this amount. Later she added to this sum from time to time until altogether she had contributed 9,500 cash (2,500 yen). Since the congregation entered the new building her husband has joined the church, and she told the pastor the other day she was so happy she could dance for joy. Other have made like sacrifices. Rachel, a faithful sister, contributed 500 cash per month earned by her needle. Mrs. Whang, the hospital matron, by presenting the new church enterprise to the patients, succeeded in raising about one yen per month besides her own contribution. Some of the native brethren subscribed so high as 50,000 cash.

A beautiful story is told by the pastor of how Kue Dougie, an invalid, one of the Ewa School girls, worked for the new church. Kue Dougie had been rescued from slavery, and became an earnest little Christian. On her back, in bed, the invalid girl's willing hands plied the needle, and beautifully embroidered thimbles and bookmarks came forth from the sick-room. They were sold, and the money carefully consecrated to the new church. The 9th of September came, when the corner-stone of the church was laid. The patient, industrious little sufferer would come, too; her cot was carefully borne and placed in the very front, where she could see and hear. And was she not worthy of the very first place? for by her zeal and devotion she had contributed over 2,000 cash, or the full wages of a grown person for a month! When the service was over, exhausted by the pain, incident to the moving, she closed her weary eyes and said to one of the teachers: "Now let me go to Jesus." On Sept. 21 her wish was granted, and the sweet child-spirit took its flight.

The first Korean was received into full membership April 17, 1887; the number of full members at the time of dedication was 98 and 130 probationers, while from this church at least two other churches have sprung in the city. Surely this labor of faith and love has not been in vain, but has been abundantly owned and blessed of the Lord.

"The Ends of the Earth."

Rev. Sheldon Jackson, the famous missionary-explorer, who recently went to Norway to collect reindeer and to engage men for the government expedition to Alaska, wrote to his brother in-law, Mr. John H. Voorhees, a most interesting letter from Bosekop, Alten, a point between three and four degrees north of the Arctic circle. He said:

I send you greetings from these ends of the earth. I was just twenty days traveling almost constantly, in reaching here from Washington (6,189 miles). Although so far north of the Arctic circle, there is no ice in the ocean. On the coast of Alaska the Arctic ice extends 500 miles south of this. Nor has it been very cold. The thermometer has not registered lower than 20 degrees above, and one day it was 35 degrees above. The people say it is an unusually mild winter, but what lacks in severity of cold, it makes up in severity of storms. It has stormed every day of the ten I have been here—snow squalls, with wind blowing a gale. Wherever there is a fence it is covered with a snow-bank. While too far north to raise vegetables, yet they keep a few horses (tough, stunted specimens), some cattle, sheep and goats. These latter are kept in the barn all winter without getting out once. The sun set here on the 20th of November and has not been seen since. According to the almanac, it was to show itself above the horizon for a few minutes yesterday noon, but it did not.

A Mission to African Dwarfs.

A GOOD Scotch lady, reading a traveler's account of the famous dwarfs of Africa, has provided the means for a mission among them, and two devoted men have undertaken to seek out these poor pigmies and teach them the Word of God. To find them will be no easy task, as the following account—the one which moved the good Scotch lady's heart—will show:

It is only by a rare chance that one ever gets a sight of these little people. They are found all over this part of Africa. Other peoples live by agriculture. The dwarfs are not so. They live by the chase and on such wild fruits and edible leaves as are found in the forest; but they are as fond of cassava, plantains, etc., as other Africans. They are not charged with stealing from their neighbors' gardens. They are remarkably honest. They attach themselves to some town of Fang, or Mabeya, or whatever tribe occupies the country. They are skilful hunters, and if there is game to be had they will get it. When hungry for vegetable food they take their game to the town and exchange it for what they want. This arrangement seems so satisfactory to both parties that often a family of dwarfs will maintain such an alliance with a town of their stronger neighbors for generations. The dwarfs are a timid, harmless people—they never pretend to fight for their rights. When people to whom they have attached themselves do them a wrong which they are disposed to resent, they simply move away and seek another alliance. It is considered an advantage to have them as neighbors. Their towns are not permanent, merely rude sheds, which they occupy only while game lasts in the neighborhood, and so constantly move from place to place that even their friends hardly know sometimes where to find them. But if the stronger tribes do not rob or kill them, they certainly take advantage of their ignorance of the world, supplying them with cloth, guns, powder, spears, at such prices as they choose to ask, and taking good care that "their dwarfs" come in contact with no one who will tell them how they are being cheated. You ask to be shown a town of the dwarfs. The people pretend to be most willing, but they explain that the dwarfs have never seen a white man and will be afraid; they must go in advance and prepare them. Their real object is to frighten them away.

A Characteristic

Hood's Sarsaparilla Testimonial

A medicine that will cure such severe sickness as alluded to below is equally effective in reaching and overcoming the numerous ailments so general at this season, and which unless promptly removed are liable to result in illness of an obstinate nature. "A stitch in time," etc., was never more aptly applied. Read Mr. Hammond's letter:

"Table Grove, Ill., Feb. 4, 1898.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"Gentlemen: Several years ago I was taken with what the doctors pronounced rheumatism and scrofula. My limbs became drawn up, and I suffered great pain. I remained in this condition for about six months, when running sores broke out on each side of my thighs and on my wrist.

Pieces of Bone Came Out of the sores on my thighs, and physicians believed the bone was diseased and thought a surgical operation would be necessary. I was then a perfect wreck and suffered untold misery. I did not have any appetite and my sleep was much disturbed. I was unable to walk and was growing worse all the time. I finally discontinued the medicine that had been prescribed for me, and began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. In a short time my appetite returned, and the sores began to heal. My limbs gradually resumed their natural condition, and I was able to throw away my crutches. In six months from the time I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla I was Able to Go About as Usual.

My cure has proved to be permanent, and I am now feeling better than I ever felt before and weigh 180 pounds. It is only a few years since I was a cripple. I have had very little sickness since taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. I gladly recommend this medicine to anyone afflicted as I was. URBAN HAMMOND.

For Your Spring Medicine

To purify your blood you need a medicine which cures blood diseases. Such cures as the above prove the merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla and should convince you that it is the best medicine for you. One bottle costs but little and will do a great deal of good. Try it this Spring.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is America's Greatest Medicine because it cures when all others fail. Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Be sure to get Hoods.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

A girl's Reading — Helpful Books for Mothers — Etiquette — Tall Girls — A Distant Correspondent — A Noble Life Ended.

OUR question, dear "Anxious Mother," is so important that I think all the other mothers will want to share in the answer, which I make to you. You say that you have a bright little daughter twelve years old, who simply devours every book she can get hold of, and that you are very carefully watching her reading because you want her taste to be formed for good books, and you do not wish her to lose all liking for serious reading. Allow me to say that this is very judicious on your part. I was the more interested in your letter because you tell me that you are yourself still under forty, and that you were married when you were quite young. It is lovely for you to be young with your daughter, and as time goes on she will grow into a relation to you which will be partly like that of a sister, while retaining all the sweetness peculiar to the bond which unites mother and daughter. You must remember, my friend, that at twelve years of age few people are inclined to be very serious, and that your little girl is obliged in her school life to give her attention closely to her studies. She must become familiar with history, geography, arithmetic and natural science. When she is out of school and has no lessons to learn, she naturally prefers to read stories. For that matter, few of us ever outgrow our childish love of being entertained and amused by bright tales and narratives. I confess myself to a genuine and strong liking for a good story. One needs, however, with a child to discriminate between what is wholesome and unwholesome. In a very tactful way, one should guard a child against all stories which are likely to give her false views of life. I especially dislike stories in which children are allowed to set themselves up as models of good behavior, and in which they sit in judgment on their own fathers and mothers. A little prig or pharisee is as disagreeable in a book as out of it. Stories of farm life, of adventure and daring heroism, and all stories which have a thoroughly good, but not too obvious moral, are good for children to read. Among those which I think you need not fear to take from the library and put in your little girl's hands are "Jessica's First Prayer," "The Schonberg-Cotta Family," "Little Women," "Little Men," "An Old Fashioned Girl," "The Flower of the Family," "Stepping Heavenward," "A Virginia Cavalier," "The Rollo Books," all stories by Ellen Deland, Sophie May or Kirk Munroe, also Rudyard Kipling's jungle-books are fine. It is a very good plan to have your daughter read aloud to you while you sew. By this means you and she may share a book together, and a mother can judge very well of the true value of a child's book by the effect it has on her own mind when she hears it read aloud.

DO NOT FEAR to let your daughter read of the fairy tales she wishes. It is a good thing to cultivate the imagination, and we do this perhaps better by reading fairy stories than in almost any other way. After a while, she will like to read stories drawn from history, and perhaps will enjoy the lives of interesting people: but the taste for this kind of literature will be formed later. In the meantime, do not neglect her Bible reading. Every day let there be a stated time when she and you, if possible, shall sit together for a little while and read God's Word. The young people of the period are growing up with less familiarity than they should have with the best of books. We are now so busy that we are very apt to neglect this best of books much to our loss. If every mother who reads "Friends in Council" would at once make up her mind to gather her children around her daily and have them read with her a chapter in God's Word, we should soon see the blessed influence of this course in the piety and Christian character of the young people who are growing up under the moulding hands of mothers.

ANOTHER friend writes asking for advice about books which will be useful to her in the bringing-up of her family. I should advise her to read "Children," by Elizabeth Robinson Scovil; "Infancy and Childhood," by Frances Fisher Wood; "Cradle and Nursery," by Christine Terhune Herrick and "Gentle Measures in the Management of the Young," by Jacob Abbott. Each of these books, in its way, is very valuable, and will be a pleasant companion and assistant to the mother who desires counsel.

ONE OF our readers asks advice in selecting a good book on etiquette. "Manners and Social Usages," by Mr. John Shirwood, is as good as any other volume which I can recommend. But do you really need one? All books on etiquette are based on two fundamental points—common sense and considerate kindness for others. One cannot go far astray about good form who remembers always to be courteous; always to answer a letter of invitation as soon as possible after its receipt; to keep an engagement sacredly; to do unto others as she would that others should do unto her. There are, of course, certain rules and conventionalities which society cares for, and it is as well to have some acquaintance with these, so that one may not be awkward or feel out of place in any company. Generally speaking, we should conform to the usages of the place in which we live.

"PRISCILLA" IS very much troubled because of her height. She says that in any room full of people she is sure to be the tallest there, and that she feels very queer and self-conscious in consequence of this. I wish I could make "Priscilla" see as I do that tallness is a great advantage, and that if she carries herself with grace and ease, holding her head well up, and not slouching forward, nor stooping, she will appear more elegant than her shorter and more dumpy sisters. A flat back is really a great beauty to a young girl. Not long ago I happened to be a guest at a party where there were a great many young people. I could not but observe with how much distinction some of the tall girls carried themselves, and they seemed to me very beautiful; like lovely lilies, which are not afraid to lift themselves up with their sweet flowers on the end of their long shining stems. Still among the most dignified girls present, I noticed a very small young woman, who was conspicuous for the grace of her movements, and who bore herself with as queenly an air as if she had been six feet tall. This dainty little creature had the charm of a perfectly symmetrical figure, and she carried her head very finely. When you think of it, the way the head is set on the shoulders, and the poise of the head is a great beauty. Some of the most beautiful figures I have ever seen in my life have been at the South among the colored women, who learned to keep the spine erect and the shoulders back by carrying pails of water on their heads when they were children. In olden times, a hundred years ago or more, a great deal of attention was paid by mothers to the manner in which their growing girls walked, stood and sat, and the poor girls used to spend some hours each day with boards strapped against their backs and their feet in the stocks, while a stiff, inflexible brisk board was placed in front to hold up their chins. Judging from some old ladies whom I have seen and who were marvelously straight at a great age, this heroic treatment was successful, though it must have been very uncomfortable.

ALL THE way from the distant State of Washington there came to me the other day a letter from the still youthful mother of no less than eleven children. This lady was married when she was only fifteen. She told me all about the beautiful life in her home, about her twins, her baby Elbert, her oldest daughter Mabel, and I am just as well acquainted in that house, with that mother and the father and all the children, as if I had shaken hands with every one of them and kissed the baby. If ever I go to Washington, I shall look in upon that home, for I think there can be no sight on earth so beautiful as that of a large family—a world in itself, where all are happy, all helpful, and all living together in peace and joy. I do not have to go across the continent to see this sight, because no farther away than in the city of New York I have an old school-mate, whose family of ten children are around her in such beauty and charm and loveliness as one seldom sees. As I meet my friend sometimes with her band of splendid sons and daughters, all taller than the little mother, my heart goes out to her, and I feel like saying, "Blessed art thou among women."

WHAT YOU say about the death of Miss Frances E. Willard, my dear Catharine, is very true. We can hardly yet rightly estimate the great loss we have sustained in her passing hence. She was a great woman—noble, sweet, refined, fearless and brave. During the last twenty years her name has been constantly before the public. She was always on the side of right. All over this land and all over the world there are people who will mourn for her, and there are those who will call her blessed, and love will keep her memory green.

SIMPLICITY ITSELF.

A SIMPLE, HARMLESS REMEDY.

Yet It Cures the Worst Cases of Dyspepsia and Indigestion.

Dr. Jennison, who has made a life study of stomach troubles, says: All forms of indigestion really amount to the same thing, that is, failure to completely digest the food eaten; no matter whether the trouble is acid dyspepsia or sour stomach, belching of wind, nervous dyspepsia or loss of flesh and appetite; a person will not have any of them if the stomach can be induced by any natural, harmless way to thoroughly digest what is eaten, and this can be done by a simple remedy which I have tested in hundreds of aggravated cases with complete success. The remedy is a combination of fruit and vegetable essences, pure aseptic pepsin and golden seal put up in the form of pleasant tasting tablets and sold by druggists under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. One or two of these tablets should be taken after meals and allowed to dissolve in the mouth, and mingling with the food in the stomach, digests it completely before it has time to ferment, decay, and sour.

On actual experiment one grain of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest three thousand grains of meat, eggs, and similar wholesome foods.

It is safe to say if this wholesome remedy was better known by people generally, it would be a national blessing, as we are a nation of dyspeptics, and nine-tenths of all diseases owe their origin to imperfect digestion and nutrition.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are not a secret patent medicine, but a fifty-cent package will do more real good for a weak stomach than fifty dollars' worth of patent medicines, and a person has the satisfaction of knowing just what he is putting into his stomach, which he does not know, when widely advertised patent medicines are used.

All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia tablets, full sized packages, 50 cts.

Costs Nothing to Try this Remedy--Send Your Name and Address To-day.

It is a frequent experience to meet people who firmly believe that no remedy exists that will cure rheumatism. They have tried a dozen or two "sure cures" and still they suffer. Some are in hospitals, others at home hopelessly helpless, while others are hobbling about on crutches. John A. Smith of Milwaukee, cured himself of just as bad a case of rheumatism as one will find in a month's journey. At times he was so helpless that he had to take morphine after considerable doctoring with leading physicians, who were unable to help him, he gave up in despair. He began studying into the causes of Rheumatism and after much experimenting and repeated failures, he finally found a remedy which cured him in a short time. After this glorious escape from the clutches of Rheumatism he called the remedy "Gloria Tonic." Then he went to work and cured his friends and neighbors and now proposes to cure the world. But Gloria Tonic cured him, so that he hasn't had a twitch of pain. He sends a trial package of his remedy free to anyone who will take the trouble to write for it. The remedy cured an old man in Texas who had suffered forty years. It cured H. Bucholz of Norborne, Mo., who had suffered 25 years and although 70 years of age at the time was practically given a new lease of life. Mrs. Persohn of Amsterdam, N. Y., tried a free trial package and the result induced her to get more of it. She was entirely cured after having suffered for years with the most intense pain. Mr. Smith has a wonderful array of testimony to show that Gloria Tonic will cure any kind and stage of rheumatism, and he wants everyone who has even a touch of this painful disease to write him for a free trial package. Don't be skeptical about this remedy. Remember it costs you nothing to try it and it is good evidence that Mr. Smith would not go to the expense of sending trial packages free unless there was real merit in the remedy. Mr. Smith's address in full is John A. Smith, 199 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

Wealth, Fame and Happiness.*

IT has been estimated that Solomon had at his command gold to the value of $3,400,000,000, and silver to the value of $5,146,000,000. The Queen of Sheba made him a present of $3,600,000, and Hiram made him a present of the same amount. Added to his riches he had royalty. He lived in a palace which Dr. James Hamilton says "required fifteen and a half years to complete—the house of the forest of Lebanon. Here he sat in his court of judgment, seated on a throne of ivory and gold, which was supported by six lions on either side. There were also ivory palaces and ivory towers, used for the king's armory. Besides these he had a summer palace at Lebanon; he built pools of water and costly aqueducts and stately gardens. Tadmor in the wilderness, now Paligura, was built by him, the massive ruins of which are the marvel of modern travelers. The style of grandeur in which he lived almost surpasses credence. Forty thousand horses for chariots and an army of horsemen were at his command. He rode in royal state, clad in snow-white raiment, in a magnificent chariot of cedar, bedecked with silver and gold and purple, attended by a body-guard of three-score valiant men, tallest and most beautiful of Israel's sons, arrayed in Tyrian purple, their long black hair sprinkled with gold-dust." His banquets were of corresponding splendor—all his plate and drinking vessels were of gold. Silver was so plenty—"it was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon."

He formed alliances with the Kings of Egypt and of Tyre. He created a commerce, and in those days, one thousand years B.C., sent his ships ploughing through the Indian Ocean to far-off Ophir in the East, on the shores of India and Arabia. They came freighted with gold and silver, fragrant woods and spices, ivory and specimens of natural history. His empire stretched from Euphrates to the Mediterranean, from the foot of Lebanon to the desert bordering on Egypt. The battle for absolute power has been going on for six thousand years; the odds are overwhelming—a million resisting one—and the million to lose the battle and find one their master is an ascendancy which Solomon possessed to a rare degree. Solomon was absolute monarch at Jerusalem. All the surrounding states and sovereigns did him homage. For thirty five years he was king, but no sooner did he find his power supreme and unchallenged than he began to be visited with misgivings as to his successor—misgivings for which the sequel showed there was too good reason. "Yea, I hated all the labor which I had taken under the sun, because I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me. but who knoweth whether he be a wise man or a fool? Yet shall he have rule over all my labor wherein I have showed myself wise under the sun. This is all vanity."

Fame is half disfame. It is the misery of being great to be aimed at. "The great are a keepess mark for the coarse lies and vulgarities of the peering malice, and the sick weak beast of envy always wounds those that attract distinction." Fame means the impossibility of privacy and rest. "Sweet," says the poet—

Sweet were the days when I was all unknown,
But when my name was strung up, the stern
Freke on the mountain, and I can not feel it

The world clapped its hands and stamped its feet in honor of Charles Lamb. Was he happy? He says, "I walk up and down, thinking I am happy, but feeling I am not." Samuel Johnson happy? "No; I am afraid I shall some day go crazy." Buchanan the world-renowned writer, exiled from his own country, appealing to Henry VIII. for protection, happy? "No; over mountains covered with snow, and through valleys flooded with rain, I come a fugitive." "Indeed, my lord," wrote famous Edmund Burke, "I doubt whether in these hard times I would give a peck of refuse wheat for all that is called fame in the world." Napoleon, after a dozen successful campaigns, after conquering country after country and laying half Europe at his feet, was he satisfied? No; his success merely whetted his appetite for new conquests; so that in his insatiable ambition to conquer the world he lost all—and at last banished to St. Helena, where he died, disappointed, broken-hearted—died amid disputes with a poor English soldier about etiquette and champagne. When Alexander had conquered the whole known world, instead of being satisfied he sat down and wept because there were no more worlds to conquer. Cyrus the Conqueror thought for a little time he was making a fine thing out of this world; yet before he came to his grave he wrote out this pitiful epitaph for his monument: "I am Cyrus. I occupied the Persian Empire. I was King over Asia. Begrudge me not this monument." But the world in after years plowed up his sepulchre.

Douglas A., Harrisburg, Pa. ($1), writes: "Use this will help some of the needy ones. It is very small but was nearly made by the selling of candy, by a boy of seven years, and it required little work on his part to get it." J. W., Brooklyn ($2), sends "The Widow's Mite." Miss Josephine D. C., on behalf of the Baptist Bible school, Flat. N. Y., and a few of their ds, sends $4 with the wish that "God may speed you in every noble endeavor." A generous friend, Miss Mary A. M., Mount Union, Pa., says she "sees so many noble contributions to the Cuban sufferers that I feel like sending some- thing, too. I send you a check for $20."

The following is taken from a letter of D. L. Moody, the well known evan- written in Tampa, Florida: "Thank you for sending THE CHRISTIAN HERALDS. I gave them to the guests in hotel, and one man read what is go- on in Cuba, and at the dinner table gave $5 to get food for the poor. I did not get his name, however. He put it down A. D.' Enclosed you find the check for that amount, and I pray the Lord will reward you for all you have done for the poor and needy. What joy to help the sick and dying. Many bless and call you blessed."

Mrs. Lacon (50c.) writes zealously: "I earn the money by doing a day's wash- and I wish from my heart I could more. May God bless you richly for good work you are doing."

"We would like to do something for Lord and Master," writes Mr. William family of New Grove, Minn. ($5).

From James G. McD., Furniss, Pa. ($5) "I cannot too highly commend the work you are doing for suffering humanity."

"My M. G., Ashtabula, O., ($1.00) sends the following sweet words with her mite: "Wish it was a thousand, but my means are limited and I am nearly seventy five years old. But perhaps the Lord will give credit for the "cup of cold water."

"We all have the cause of Cuba at heart. I send one dollar, and am so sorry it is not five dollars—it looks so small compared to the blessings we have in this country. My prayer is that God's blessing may rest on you and your work," writes Mrs. B., Havana, Ill. ($1).

"Ben and Willie G., two little boys, living at Gray's Point, send 50 cents between them. Oran writes: "We are only little country boys, but a little is better than none."

"May God help you in your noble work and them in their sorrow," writes "Friend," Sherman Mills, Maine ($1.25).

"May he add his blessing" is the prayer of Mrs. William F., Scotch Ridge, Ohio ($1).

A member of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, of Plainfield, N. J., (whose Sunday-school contributed liberally last year to the India Famine Fund), visited THE CHRISTIAN HERALD offices in the Bible House a few days ago and paid over as contributions to the Cuban Relief Fund $105. This was in part the result of the gift of a check by another brother of the same church, after reading one of our Cuban Famine pamphlets, and in part to the distribution of these pamphlets among the office associates of the gentlemen who made the collection. This sum is exclusive of $10 from the Christian Endeavor Society. We might mention many other instances where consecrated men and women are doing splendid service for Christ and humanity in the work of Cuban relief.

A letter from the United Presbyterian Sunday School of Bellevue, Pa., containing $27 for Cuba, says:

A good part of this money was saved by the children from spending money which had been given them. Our school is a small one and the amount I send is the special collection of one day, and is more than four times larger than ever was taken in the school in one day before. Our school wishes to help to save the lives of some of the children in Cuba.

THE KING'S DAUGHTERS OPPORTUNITY.—"Give these people and their needs one hour of your Circle life. Gather a few telling facts . . . The Government Committee is sending shipload after shipload of provisions, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, whose proprietor is a member of that Committee, is foremost in this, as in every good work of the kind. If we were awake, I will not say to our duty, but to our privilege, we might have had the delight of knowing that we had saved many of his little ones from cruel sufferings and possibly death by starvation." The Silver Cross.

WHOLE FAMILIES DYING TOGETHER.—"Before I left Washington I was permitted to look over the Consular reports. From brief abstracts taken from some of the reports, from Consuls all over the island, I give the following facts: One Consul reports that in a single province 75,000 have died of starvation. It is estimated that in the four western provinces no less than 200,000 have died of starvation. This same Consul proceeds to state that the death of whole families occurred simultaneously. Food is so scarce that cats sell for thirty cents apiece. It is not possible for the Governor General to relieve the present suffering with the means at his disposal." Gen. Foster, Ex-Secretary of State.

PRAYERFULNESS.

By Pastor Thomas Spurgeon.

We have considered cheerfulness, and earnestness, and readiness, but perhaps we ought to have had prayerfulness first. This virtue is doubtless the spring and root of the others. All the graces droop if not sustained by prayer. When C. H. Spurgeon was asked pointblank as to the secret of his success, he made reply: "My people pray for me." Thus did he exhibit at once his humble spirit, and his faith in prayer. All the world knows that there were other reasons for the phenomenal results of his work, and no one knew it better than himself; yet it was not merely modesty that dictated that response. It was necessary that there should be much prayer, or even his marvelous genius might have failed of its highest and holiest purposes. He was prayerful himself, and it was a case of like pastor, like people. Not wealth, nor culture, nor influence, nor ability, nor numbers can secure true blessings to a church—but scriptural prayerfulness, for this means dependence on the Holy Ghost, combined with earnest effort on the part of every member. Happy the pastor who, in describing his flock, was able to speak of it as "a prayer-loving church." We asked no further details for we were sure that all was well in every department. This sign sufficed. But, alas! for him who had to say of a certain Christian community, that its place of worship had seating capacity for twelve hundred, but "no kneeling capacity." It is by no means necessary to kneel in prayer, but "kneeling capacity" is essential to spiritual health and well-being.

I propose to mention four considerations in praise of prayer, that should commend it to all hearts. Many others might be named—reasons why we should delight in supplication are legion—but these may serve to indicate, as it were, the cardinal points of the bright firmament of prayer:

1. Prayer is acceptable. God loves to hear his children's voices. "The prayer of the upright is his delight." Their sighs are as welcome as the angels' songs. He prefers their tears to rivers of oil, and their groans to thousands of gold and silver.

Are sighs, and tears, and groans, prayers, then? Assuredly they are. More eloquent prayers there could not be. They are the language of the heart. Therefore God loves them.

> To him there is music in a groan
> And beauty in a tear.

Praying is a sign of life. None of God's children are born dumb. Every true-hearted parent is pleased with the parable of its little ones. How some have longed to hear their offspring speak, for they feared that they were tongue-tied! Think you not that our heavenly Father has wished to hear us lisp his name and crave his blessing? How else can even he be sure that we are indeed alive from the dead? Let us prove that we are living by calling on his name. Thus, also, may we declare that we are spiritually healthy. The breath of prayer comes from the life of faith. If we pray little it is evident that our spiritual organs are out of order. Consumption has seized us, or dyspepsia has spoiled our appetite. Whatever indisposes to prayer is wrong.

Moreover, prayerfulness is a proof of meekness and God loves to be trusted. Nothing pleases him better than our "importunate petitions." He requires to be acquainted with our every difficulty and challenging. He does not think it necessary to question pleaded. Even should he withhold the choicest of his favors, we will still rely upon him as long as we live; and because it gives him joy.

Moreover, prayer is profitable. The exercise itself does us good. Prayer brings God into the heart and keeps sin out. It pays to pray. Prayer and provender hinder no man's journey. Time spent in prayer is never wasted. It is as the buckling of the spur, and the whetting of the scythe. "A true Christian will find his parenthesis for prayer even during the busiest hours," indeed the busier he is, he will, like Luther, need more prayer.

But this indirect blessing is not all. Prayer gains its end, and secures the boon. Believing prayer does not merely beat the air. God hears and answers. His purposes are made, his plans are laid, we know. We know also that this is one of them. He has himself decreed that men ought always to pray, and not to faint. We should have more direct answers if our prayers were more direct. We draw the bow at a venture, rather than aiming for a centre. Moreover, prayer and pains should ever go together. A steam trawler recently went ashore, and at the Board of Trade enquiry it was stated that when the vessel struck five of the crew were down below saying their prayers. If that be true it only proves that some who pray forget to watch and work, but prayer must not get the blame. We know that it is good to call upon the Lord. None can reason us out of our confidence, or laugh us into renouncing our blessed habit. Their lack of experience in the matter doesn't affect ours. "This poor man cried and the Lord heard him." It was not fancy, but fact. Lastly, prayer is so practicable. God does not ask for something difficult to render. His commandments are not grievous. His yoke is easy, and his burden is light. He does not desire orations.

> Prayer is the simplest form of speech
> That infant lips can try.

He does not prescribe certain times, and special places, and particular attitudes.

And, thank God, the manner and matter of our prayer need not be unduly studied. Fine words are not always the most fit. Attitude is not everything. The blind beggar prays though his lips move not. His sightless eyeballs plead. The exhibition of our wants and woes is prayer enough sometimes. I saw a dog one day, on board a ship, pick up a bucket in his mouth and carry it to the pump. Thus he craved a drink. Our God is not exacting. He hears unspoken prayer. Bring you your empty vessel to his o'erflowing fountain. You need not make a speech. He thinks more of the strength of your cry than of its length. The travail of the heart is more to him than the labor of the lips.

If prayer is so sweet to God and man, and so paying and possible withal, who will not gladly respond when God the Holy Ghost whispers in the heart, saying "Let us pray?"

Have You Asthma in Any Form?

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in every form in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its cures are really marvelous. Rev. I. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, W. Va., writes that it cured him of Asthma of fifty years' standing, and Hon. I. G. Clute, of Greeley, Iowa, testifies that for three years he had to sleep propped up in a chair being unable to lie down night or day from Asthma. The Kola Plant cured him at once. To make the matter sure, these and hundreds of other cures are sworn to before a notary public. To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power the Kola Importing Co., No. 1164 Broadway New York will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who suffers from any form of Asthma. All they ask in return is that when cured (and you will be) you will tell your neighbors about it. Send your name and address on a postal card and they will send you a large case by mail free. It costs you nothing, and you should write to-day.

Cures While You Sleep

Vapo-Cresolene Whooping Cough, Croup, Colds, Cough, Asthma, Catarrh

During recent years an important change has taken place in the treatment of certain diseases of the air passages. While formerly was the custom to rely almost entirely on internal medications in the treatment, the importance of direct applications of medicines to the diseased parts is becoming more and more generally recognized.

Of this method of treatment, Cresolene is the most largely used, the most successful in its results, and the most convenient way of medicating the air passages.

HOSPITALITY.

A Grace Enjoined by the Apostles and Commended by Our Lord. Gen. 18: 1-10; Heb. 13: 2.

That hospitality is a grace should never be forgotten. Western nations come far behind the Orient in this. A man may live for years in one of our cities and never receive an invitation to his neighbor's house: worse than this, he may attend a church regularly for months, without word of kindly greeting, or a shake of the hand. If a stranger from a foreign land enters a city, though he be a Christian, and Christians know of his being there, how seldom is he invited to occupy a seat at our table, or to make his home with us during the day. We pay no attention to the Apostle's injunction: "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers." We cannot refuse to believe that "some have entertained angels unawares:" but apparently we do not believe that any angels are among us now, or, if we do believe it, are not anxious to have the privilege of entertaining them. It is the more singular that this grace should have fallen into disuse, because Christ specially and expressly commended it. Whosoever gave a cup of cold water to a disciple, because he was a disciple, was assured of his reward. We have lost to a large extent that sense of oneness which Christ would characterize his followers. The man of our own station, or our own business, or our own political party, is dearer to us in these days than the man who is a brother Christian. Time was when the Christian had a claim on every Christian which was universally recognized. We give more to public charities than was ever given before, we build hospitals and almshouses and subscribe to funds for the relief of the destitute and afflicted, but the personal element is lacking. It is this which has separated the classes even in our own land. As a great writer causes one of his characters to say, "I am willing to meet the poor at the table and at the Lord's table, but a man's house is sacred." This sense of aloofness, of shrinking from personal contact and social association, has an alienating effect which cannot be removed by charitable gifts. The Settlements now in operation in many of our cities are a clear proof that friendly intercourse and neighborliness alone is a power that has long been neglected. When hospitality comes to be regarded as a Christian duty and the need of it Christian comes to be a matter of concern to every other Christian who knows of it, then, and not till then shall be fulfil our Lord's ideal of the bond of brotherhood which he wished us to realize.

BRIEF NOTES.

Wesleyan Methodism in the United Kingdom, there are over one million Sunday school scholars and teachers: 245,000 of whom are fifteen years of age.

Mrs. Spurgeon writes that her husband's sermons have been translated into Russian, and continue to be read with undiminished eagerness. The translations are being made by Mr. Frey.

Evangelist William Philips Hale is a stalwart man and an earnest preacher. He has been holding services at the Baptist Temple, Brooklyn. Many men rose on invitation and expressed conversion.

The results of mission work in the foreign field equal those in Uganda, Eastern Africa. The country was unknown to Europeans in 1856, and the first missionary was a school-master. In 1857 the missionaries numbered 319, and in the next forty years the number doubled, and to-day, counting wives and women, the missionaries and their wives would raise the total to over 1,000.

Mr. Gladstone's health has been much improved since his return from the south of France. He is still at Bournemouth. The doctors are quite sure that there is no growth in his nose. The disease is disappearing. He has given up work. His friends read to him, play to him and help the time to pass pleasantly. He has many visitors.

The City of Amsterdam will be en fete for three days in September next, in celebration of the accession of Queen Wilhelmina. The three principal exhibitions will be objects of the house of Orange, works of Rembrandt, and national costumes. The report of the young Queen's betrothal to Prince Louis Napoleon has been denied.

The Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage, at the Madison Park Presbyterian Church, on the 6th of March welcomed into the church 135 new members. The four months in which Mr. Talmage has preached in Chicago the membership has been increased and in that time over 200 new converts have joined the church. Besides this a mortgage of $25,000 has been lifted and the church is to-day out of debt.

The Archbishop of Canterbury and nine bishops are total abstainers. Five Suffragan bishops are also abstainers. The Archbishop of Dublin and six of the Irish Episcopal bishops are reported to be abstainers, leaving the Archbishop of Armagh and four bishops who are not. The Archbishop of Canterbury and Mr. A. F. Hills, President and Treasurer of the Sunday Closing Special Campaign Committee have taken steps to secure the enactment of a measure extending to England the benefits of the Sunday closing law, long enjoyed by Scotland and Wales and parts of Ireland.

The last Quarterly Conference of People's Temple, Boston, Mass., held Feb. 21, 1898, most heartily invited its pastor, Rev. James Boyd Brady to return for another year. The great congregation also added its unanimous vote on the succeeding Sabbath. This means that Dr. Brady is invited to remain nearly six months beyond the five years time limit. All concerned have resolved to make this last year of Dr. Brady's the best in the history of the Temple. The Temple has had a multitude of worshippers and 3,300 conversions so far during the present pastorate. The prayers of God's people are asked for the continued cumulative success of the great work.

A Christian Centenarian.

It is seldom that a church of even a very large membership has upon its roll the name of one who is over 100 years old. But the Congregational Church of Carthage, N. Y., Rev. J. B. Felt, pastor, is an exception. On Monday, March 7, occurred the funeral of their oldest member Isaiah Wood, 103 yrs., 7 mos., 11 days. Mr. Wood was of German descent, his grandfather coming to New York in 1663. Isaiah was born July 21, 1794 in Cane Tuck, Canada, but became of age in the United States. He was twice married. Two sons by his first marriage, Enoch and Ames, living in the west, survive him, and also two children by the second marriage, one of whom is John B. Wood, of Carthage, at whose house the father has lived these past ten years. Mr. Wood was a Christian for over 82 years, and greatly beloved by a large circle of friends. George Olley another member of the church above mentioned was 100 years old last Christmas day, with well preserved faculties of mind and body.

WHAT WILT THOU DO FOR THE MASTER?

WHAT wilt thou do for the Master,
Ere daylight has faded away?
Delay not—for darkness is coming,
Oh, hasten to work while you may.
What wilt thou do for the Master,
Who loves thee as no other could?
Who blesses thee daily and hourly,
Withholding no thing that is good.

What wilt thou do for the Master?
Go comfort some sorrowing heart—
Some weary one's burden make lighter—
Do something wherever thou art.
What wilt thou do for the Master?
Go sing for the lonely and sad—
Go lift up some down-trodden brother—
Be helpful and hopeful and glad.

So many are walking in darkness—
So many are going astray—
And many are starving for friendship—
And many are dying to-day.
In blessed and holy endeavor,
Go serving thy Master divine—
And yonder forever and ever,
Abundant reward shall be thine.

Oberlin, O. MRS. FRANK A. BRECK.

Doctors Disagree

on many things. But doctors of all schools agree on one thing; that Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine to prescribe for blood diseases. Why? Because the medical profession recognize Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla as the standard preparation; Because secret sarsaparillas are not safe for the physician to prescribe or patient to purchase, and you don't know what you are getting under the name of sarsaparilla unless you

The Kaiser's Trip to Palestine.

A Berlin cablegram announces that a discussion is proceeding between the Emperor and the Evangelical Council of Prussia relative to the programme and aims of the royal trip to Palestine in October, the Court Martial fixing all the details, which will be submitted to the Emperor before they are adopted. One of His Majesty's main objects is to determine authoritatively the exact sites of Golgotha, the Temple of Jerusalem, the Crucifixion, the Pretorium and similar places.

Free.—A Wonderful Shrub,—Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

New evidence shows that Alkavis, the new botanical extract of the Kava Kava Shrub, is indeed a true specific for diseases peculiar to women, and for all diseases of the Kidneys and urinary organs. A remarkable case is that of Rev. A. C. Dayton of New Castle, N. Y., as told in the Ascutney Herald of recent date. He was cured by Alkavis after all else had failed. Let forty days' trial prove what it will do for you. Write to the Alkavis Company, Box 1895 B, New York City, for their pamphlet containing many cases of kidney and bladder diseases cured by Alkavis. Up to the present time 100,000 bottles of Alkavis have been sold. Over 1,000 druggists in the United States and Canada now sell it. Many of these druggists are personally known to the Alkavis Company, and they guarantee that every statement made in behalf of Alkavis is true. Alkavis will be found in every reputable drug store in the land. Ask your druggist for it. If he says he has no Alkavis, tell him to write to the Alkavis Company for it. Alkavis is a positive cure for Kidney Diseases, Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Backache, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, and all diseases due to impure blood. Use Alkavis or Liquid Cascara. We are glad to send their names and address to the sufferer, and receive the Alkavis free. Try it. A wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free.

DOWN LIFE'S HILLSIDE.

("Death is his grand Birthday.")

I SEE one drawing nearer
Whose day of life has sped;
He comes in trust, believing
The words the Master said.
His soul all calm and restful,
He walks through death's dark vale;
He fears not, finds no evil,
The promise does not fail.

Deeper he goes—still deeper—
The death-wave rises high,
He sings, in Jesus trusting:
"Thy chosen cannot die."
And from our sight, all living,
He sinks in placid sleep.
The earthly life is over,
There falls a silence deep.

A rush of angel spirits,
And the transfigured soul
Is borne with song of victory
Where mighty pæans roll.
Around the throne, where sitteth
The Lamb, who once was slain,
Where crowns are cast before him,
By all the ransomed train.

R. T. BOOTH'S
TRADE Mi-O-NA MARK
A CERTAINTY IN MEDICINE.
THE HAWAIIAN CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA

The treatment for throat and lung diseases, which to-day is the most popular remedy on the market, was discovered and given to the world by R. T. Booth. He now offers to the public his latest and most wonderful discovery—MI-O-NA—a CURE for indigestion and dyspepsia.

Mr. Booth's position in the scientific and commercial world is a guarantee that what he offers to the public will be exactly as represented.

R. T. Booth's MI-O-NA is not a palliative, laxative or an artificial digestive: it is a HEALER, and CURES by removing all congestion and inflammation and putting the entire digestive system in a sound, healthy condition.

MI-O-NA, the HAWAIIAN CURE, is the only medicine that acts directly upon the digestive organs and NOT UPON THEIR CONTENTS. In this respect it differs from all other remedies prescribed for indigestion.

Soda, pepsin, pancreatin and all the other palliatives never have and never can CURE a single case of dyspepsia.

MI-O-NA ABSOLUTELY PREVENTS UNNATURAL FERMENTATION.

The native race of Hawaii represents a grand trinity—height, standard weight, and perfect health. Their fine physique and splendid health are due entirely to a perfect digestion.

But they owe their perfect digestion to the Taro, a plant indigenous to Hawaii, which is used as a vegetable.

Mr. Booth found in the root the part used for food, medicinal properties that have an extraordinary effect upon the mucous membrane of the alimentary canal. They destroy irritation, remove congestion, allay inflammation and absolutely prevent unnatural fermentation. The active principle also cause the digestive fluids to flow in a natural abundance; the lymphatics are kept up to the proper activity during the assimilation, and thus is created a perfect digestion.

It was Mr Booth who made the very important discovery that in 95 cases out of every 100 where the weight is normal there is PERFECT DIGESTION AND PERFECT HEALTH.

An interesting booklet on HOW TO GET WELL AND STAY WELL, together with full information of Mr. Booth's great discovery relating to WEIGHT, WEIGHT and PERFECT HEALTH, sent on application. Also a trial sample of MI-O-NA free. Box of MI-O-NA at your druggist's or by mail, 50 cents. Address

By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D.

Even-Handed Justice.

DIVINE justice is always even-handed. There is no favoritism there. The way disrespect is bred in the hearts of the people for the law, because of favoritism which is sometimes shown in the courts, is graphically illustrated in a case which comes from the West.

After the members of the jury had filed in and taken their seats, the judge said:

"Am I to understand that you wish further instructions from the court?"

"Well, not exactly, that, judge," answered the foreman. "The instructions are all clear enough, but we are a little in the dark in regard to some of the evidence. As we understand it, there is no dispute as to the facts in the case. And now we come to the real problem, which we are of the opinion has been somewhat neglected by the lawyers. What is this woman's social position?"

"What!" exclaimed the judge.

"What is her social position?" repeated the foreman. "How can we tell whether she is a kleptomaniac or a thief without knowing that? If we are to reach a decision we must hear all the evidence on that feature of the case, and it is too late to have it introduced you might just as well call it a mistrial and start all over again. We will never be able to agree."

Unseen Evidence.

The universe of God is a whispering gallery where nothing is lost out of being. Unseen evidence is kept of all the deeds of human life. After awhile the books are to be opened.

A very interesting telephone case has just been decided in Sweden. A business man in Stockholm, a Mr. Kugelman, had entered into business arrangement with a certain banker, the affair having been arranged through the medium of the telephone. As the business did not pay the profit Mr. Kugelman expected, he absolutely refused to come to a settlement and was consequently sued by the banker. When the case appeared in court the defendant insisted that the bank had no written security from him, and no witnesses to prove the transaction. It was, however, shown to the intense amusement of both court and spectators, that the telephone at the bank was provided with two receivers, and everything transpiring through the telephone could therefore be heard and legally proven. The defendant lost his case.

A Wife's Secretary.

One of the phases of modern life, which nearly everybody at all in public life has a stenographer or a secretary, was amusingly suggested by an incident which occurred the other day at the National Capitol.

A newspaper woman in Washington called on Mrs. John Sherman not long ago to get some information, but found that she was not at home.

"Well, hasn't she a secretary who can tell me about it?" said the newspaper woman.

"Certainly, madam," answered the messenger; "this way please," and leading the way along the hall he threw open a door and ushered her into the presence of the Secretary of State. The Secretary laughed heartily with the quick-witted newspaper woman explained the situation, and consented to act as the wife's private secretary long enough to get the information that was desired.

Dread Prophecies.

Many young people have in their inheritance of talents, or gifts, or opportunities, prophecies of greatness which are dumb and silent to them because they have not the wisdom to read them.

The Czar Nicholas, who died in 1855, is one sovereign who made a love match. He courted Princess Charlotte of Prussia, the eldest daughter of Frederick William III., when he was a Grand Duke, and not the heir expectant to the Russian Crown.

The Princess, when it was considered that her education was completed, received from her old governess a small antique ring, and at once began to wear it habitually. About a year after the gift was made, Grand Duke Nicholas came to visit at her father's court. He fell in love with her, and one day when they sat beside each other at dinner, he begged her to give him this ring as a sign that his love was returned.

"What, give a ring at a dinner table! before all these people?"

"Let me see—press it into that piece of bread and give it to me."

Gallant persistence had its reward—press it into the bread and give it to him she did. And now comes an odd touch in the story; the lover examined the ring with an attention the princess had never given it, and he found what she had never seen—an inscription on the inner side in French, and that inscription ran: "L'Imperatrice de la Russie." The princess had been wearing something that looked like a prophecy, but she became a wife and a mother before she was an Empress. The Emperor Nicholas wore the little ring on a chain about his neck as long as he lived.

The Currents of Life.

When we are at peace with God we put ourselves in harmony with the currents of life. All things work together then for our good.

A very curious theory lately revived, is that the sap of a living tree ebbs and flows in some way in sympathy with the tides of the ocean. This idea comes from Italy, where a grower of vines and other fruit trees, who is also a chemist, has been experimenting in this direction. He says that no trees should be lopped or pruned except during the hours of ebb-tide. He has taken fourteen years to come to this conclusion, and now always acts upon it. The result is that his trees and vines have developed beautiful foliage, bear splendid crops, and are quite free from the attacks of the insects which devastate surrounding orchards.

The Seeds of Happiness.

That happiness comes from sharing with one another rather than from selfishly hoarding our treasures is suggested by a strange legend of the peach that comes from Japan.

The Japanese, who claim to have first discovered or utilized the peach, have a quaint legend as to the fruit. A pious old couple, stricken with years and poverty, subsisted by begging. One day in the highway the woman found the beautiful ripe fruit. Although almost famished, she did not selfishly eat the luscious peach alone, but took it home to divide it with her husband. As the knife cut into it, the fruit opened and an infant sprang forth, who told the astonished beggars that he was the god, Shin To, and had accidentally fallen from the orchard in the Japanese heaven while at play with some other gods and goddesses. For extricating him from the peach, Shin To gave the Japs its seed to plant and told them its product would make them wealthy. This, according to the Japanese, is the origin of the peach.

CHEERFULNESS.

Any day, wet or cold, hot or dry, is pleasant to the thoroughly healthy man or woman. We have within ourselves the power to make our days cheerful or disagreeable. We do not depend upon the condition of the sky or atmosphere, for when one is perfectly poised, physically and mentally, the days go by as a dream of comfort, whether they be dark or sunny.

Our goal should be health. Mental health is a strong element to bring about physical health, but ill health can be, and is, set up by the use of elements contained in food and drink that do not conform to the wants of Nature.

We are inclined to the use of narcotics and stimulants for their temporary deadening or quickening of the nervous system and the heart, but these unnatural things bring about serious conditions; for instance, the pulse of the coffee drinker or tobacco user shows derangement (either little or great) of the heart. This trouble is ordinarily coupled with stomach and some other difficulties.

The ones who see clearly the advantage in business, home and society, of a perfect condition of mental and physical health, will not require urging to have them abandon articles of food or drink that prevent the accomplishment of the desired end.

The leaving off of coffee for ten days and the use of Postum Food Coffee in its stead, will demonstrate the value of the above suggestion and the fact that Postum furnishes brain and body with well selected food elements which go to rebuild the daily disintegration, while at the same time, Postum furnishes a delicious beverage if one be particular to know that after boiling commences, it is allowed to continue boiling fifteen minutes. This is necessary to obtain the food elements and the proper taste.

* * * *

Postum is the only Cereal Coffee yet discovered, with a coffee taste, that is pure and free from low grade coffee or other drugs.

These two letters were not solicited by us. Don't look upon them as "testimonials," but as genuine remarks of appreciation from total strangers.

GENTLEMEN — Oct. 27, 1897.
I wish to thank you for the very liberal manner in which you have treated me in sending premiums as they have all been quadruple plate instead of triple plate as I expected. It is refreshing in these days to find a concern that gives more than they advertise. ELVIRA MACKEY 228 Julien St., Belvidere, Ills.

GENTLEMEN — Feb. 12, 1897.
I received some spoons today safely and am more than pleased with same, please accept thanks for promptness in sending them. Yours respectfully
MRS. W. J. HUDSON,
Box 436 Belleville, Ont.

DEAR SIRS — Oct. 16, 1897.
I am more than delighted and all my friends are very pleasantly surprised at the quality of goods you sent us. Your promptness in filling orders and the value received is a source of much gratification to all concerned.
MRS. A. E. PATTERSON,
Billie Fair'y, Charlotte, N.C.

"ALL ARE DELIGHTED"

Is it not impressive when Thousands of Ladies, writing from Cities, Towns, Villages, Hamlets and Rural Districts, TAKE THE TROUBLE to acknowledge the receipt of their spoons in one unanimous chorus—"We Are All Delighted".

Does it not give TREMENDOUS EMPHASIS to our oft-repeated assertion that this set of SIX Genuine World's Fair Souvenir Teaspoons, full size for daily use, is an Incomparable Bargain—a matchless opportunity—the most startling offer ever made by a reliable firm! And is it not CONVINCING EVIDENCE of their genuine value that year after year since the great World's Fair closed its gates forever the demand for these marvelous spoons has increased as the years recede? "We Are All Delighted" is something for every woman to remember. For, whether she has a birthday to keen, to give, or a wedding gift in view, or is bothered about a suitable Christmas present, or needs a beautiful set of spoons for the table, or wishes to leave coming generations a memorial of the great World's Fair, she cannot do better than join the great chorus of Delighted ones.

ONLY 99¢ • FOR ALL SIX • FORMERLY SOLD FOR 9.00

These are the Original World's Fair Souvenir Teaspoons. The panic of 1893 and the failure of a syndicate of private dealers to dispose of them on the Fair Grounds threw them back on our hands and slowly but surely we are awakening the public to the fact that for artistic merit, matchless elegance and serviceable durability, a set of six of these Handsome and Famous World's Fair Souvenir full size Teaspoons at 99 cents is the GRANDEST BARGAIN OF THE TIMES.

JUST THINK OF IT! Every visitor to the Fair knows that the price of these spoons on the Fair grounds was $1.50 apiece, or $9.00 for a set of six, or $18.00 for the entire collection of 12 different spoons, and here we sell you a set of six for only 99c. The spoons are divided into two different sets as follows: Set No. 4 comprises these six buildings—Manufacturers, Horticultural, Woman's, Fisheries, Machinery Hall, Transportation. Set No. 5 comprises these six—Administration, Art, Agriculture, Electrical, Mining, Government. You can have either set you like, but under no circumstances will less than a set of six be sold, nor will they be divided in any other manner than above. Bear in mind that these are not cheap, washed over spoons, but genuine triple plate silver on white metal, stamped LEONARD MFG. CO., A 1—a guarantee of reliability. They are FULL SIZE for table use, and the entire bowl outside and inside is gold plated, showing a beautifully engraved and embossed building of the Fair. The set of six is put up in a handsomely-lined box and is sent by mail PREPAID on receipt of 99 cents.

WE WILL REFUND YOUR MONEY. Remember, if this wonderful bargain does not come up to your expectations, or if you believe they have been misrepresented in any manner, we will refund your money on demand.

You will pay $1.50 for six ordinary plain plated spoons—here you get a beautiful pattern, with gold-plated bowls, at only 99 cents for six. A hundred dollars invested in something else for a birthday, wedding or Christmas gift wouldn't give half the genuine delight and satisfaction. Our references are any Bank, Express Company, or Bradstreet's report. Send money by express or postoffice money order, or registered letter. We do not accept personal checks. State whether you prefer set No. 4 or set No. 5.

PHOTOGRAPH OF THE YELLOW RAMBLER WHILE IN BLOOM.

Hardy Climbing Yellow Rose.

The Yellow Rambler. Rosarians have been for many years crossing or hybridizing various Roses with a view to obtaining a hardy yellow climbing Rose, but the combination of climbing habit and yellow color with hardiness was one that it seemed impossible to obtain, and was almost despaired of. The Yellow Rambler has been found to successfully withstand, without protection, a continued temperature of from zero to fifteen degrees below, which proves it to be the only hardy yellow climbing Rose yet introduced. It can be successfully grown in all the northern parts of the United States and Canada; in fact, anywhere that other Roses succeed at all well. Did we say nothing more about the Rose, we think that this would be sufficient to establish its value, for what lover of Roses in the North has not bewailed the severity of climate which nearly deprives his garden of the most attractive color of all—yellow. The flowers are borne in immense clusters, after the same manner as the Crimson Rambler, often as many as one hundred and fifty blossoms in a bunch, and the trusses have the same handsome pyramidal shape as those of the Crimson Rambler. The color is a decided yellow.

REMEMBER, this is the only hardy climbing Yellow Rose. We have an immense stock of this grand new variety. If you want the genuine Yellow Rambler Rose, send to us for it. Price, 25 cts. each; three for 50 cts.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

S. R. R., Brooklyn, N. Y., and many others. Is it true as I have seen in a Boston journal that Mr. D. L. Moody was baptized by immersion last summer at Northfield and that he now administers baptism to converts?

It is not true. There have been many baptisms by immersion at the Northfield gatherings. Sometimes the late Dr. A. J. Gordon used to officiate, and more recently Rev. R. A. Torrey. Mr. Moody is quite willing that anyone who prefers that mode, should undergo the rite. He leaves the decision absolutely with the candidate. He regards it as a matter of conscience, and does not seek to influence the candidate in favor of either mode. He believes, as did the Apostle Paul, that God sent him "not to baptize but to preach the Gospel."

"Amy," Newton, Conn. How did slang come into use, and what was its origin?

Notwithstanding dictionary definitions slang includes many terms which are neither vulgar nor abusive. Even the ancient Greeks and Romans had something like slang in their common speech, but in the modern sense it seems to have originated in the middle ages, largely owing to the introduction of foreign words in the various languages, through the almost unceasing wars. The gypsies did a good deal to spread slang, by their appropriation and dissemination of words from the languages of the various countries through which they wandered. There has been for ages, and is to-day a criminal slang, or thieves "jargon," not generally understood by persons outside of the criminal class; but apart from that there has been and is a respectable slang, consisting of trade terms, and of expressions that have no equivalent in conventional languages.

Augustus, Theological Seminary, Bangor, Me. 1. Please tell me what book you can recommend on the subject of memory training and mind culture? 2. The best syllabus of European history, both secular and religious, to show chronologically the sequence of events. 3. Which do you consider the best encyclopædia issued since the ninth edition of the Britannica?

1. We know no better book on the subject of memory training than "Memory, What It Is, And How To Improve It," by David Kay, International Education Series. 2. Hassall's "Handbook of European History," and "Periods of European History," by the same author, ought to answer your second query. We may add that owing to the union of church and state in most European countries, the religious history of Europe is inseparable from the secular, and any good history ought to cover the subject of your question. 3. There can be no better encyclopædia for the American student, than the "Word-Wide Encyclopædia," published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and offered on terms which place it within the reach of people of moderate means.

T. E. W., Muncie Ind. Not considering Bible characters who is the greatest man the world ever produced

Nearly every nation has its own great national hero, but the general sentiment of enlightened mankind undoubtedly points to George Washington as having possessed more elements of true greatness than any other individual outside of sacred history.

M. E. A., Philadelphia, Pa. What is the Keswick Convention which there is so much talk?

It takes its name from Keswick, a beautiful town on the shores of a lake in Cumberland, England, where a number of Christians have been in the habit of meeting for annual conference. Their views of the Christian life are distinctly opposed to the views which have a tendency to become popular in all ages as to the value of forms and rites and ceremonies. There are some people who think that if they have been baptized by a clergyman in infancy and confirmed by a bishop at maturity and attend church regularly and take the communion at stated intervals, or if they have been baptized by immersion and have joined the church, all will be well with them no matter how they live. There are others who do not go so far as this, but still have an exaggerated idea of the value of ordinances. The Keswick believers are opposed to all this. Their idea of the Christian life is of one who gives himself and all he is and has to Christ; that he shall put away from him every hindrance to progress and earnestly seek to live without sin; that in so living, God will fill his heart, giving him a distaste for worldliness and all forms of evil; and will impart to him new strength for greater and ever greater purity of heart; and will bless him with a sweet peace which results from the cessation of the warfare in his own nature between good and evil impulses, the evil being kept in absolute subjection if not entirely eliminated.

Subscriber, Laredo, Tex. 1. Was Judas present at the institution of the Lord's Supper? 2. Was Jephthah's daughter offered up in sacrifice, or merely condemned to a life of celibacy?

1. It is impossible to speak positively as to the presence of Judas. A careful comparison of the Gospels appears to indicate that the Supper was not instituted until after he left the table, although it does not make the fact absolutely certain. The most that can be said is that Judas probably was absent. 2. This, also, is uncertain. The phrase "who did with her according to his vow" (Judges 11: 39), seems to imply that she was really sacrificed, and, in the semi-anarchy which then prevailed, it may have been so. But it is possible she may simply have been doomed to celibacy, which was a fate that the women of those days regarded as little better than death. When it was possible that any woman might be the mother of a great leader in Israel, childlessness was dreaded. The annual celebration mentioned in the fortieth verse, seems to imply that the girl lived in seclusion and was not killed. There was, besides, a legal provision for just such cases (Leviticus 27: 2-5), of which Jephthah, as a judge, would surely have known, which would have relieved him of the sacrifice to which he was evidently averse.

Reader, Bowling Green, Ohio. Would you please state how many ships there are in the United States navy?

The United States has ten battleships, not counting the Maine destroyed in Havana harbor, two armored cruisers, and sixteen unarmored cruisers, to which must be added the two cruisers recently purchased from Brazil. The navy also includes one ram, six double-turret monitors, fifteen gunboats, four vessels of a special class, including the dynamite cruiser Vesuvius and a torpedo cruiser, twenty-three torpedo boats, six old iron vessels, and ten old wooden vessels. The yacht Mayflower has just been purchased to be fitted out as an auxiliary cruiser, and the government is understood to be contemplating other purchases of a similar character.

Subscriber, Mexico, N. Y. Would it be possible in some cases for a person to answer his own prayers?

We are not sure about your meaning. If you prayed that a friend in need might be relieved and afterwards saw it to be your own duty to send him money, that would be a case in point. If you prayed that you might overcome some besetting sin and then struggled so earnestly and persistently that you did overcome, you might consider that a case of answering your own prayer, though the Apostolic explanation might be that "God worked in you to will and to do." The most successful prayers are those in which a man asks God to give him the power he needs to accomplish some good thing for himself or others.

T. Angell, St. Paul, Minn. Would you please tell me the origin of State names?

We have hardly the space for a full list. Virginia was named in honor of Queen Elizabeth, the "Virgin Queen" of England; Maryland after Henrietta Maria, queen of Charles I. of England; New York was given by King Charles to his brother James, Duke of York, hence the name; New Jersey was named in honor of Sir George Carteret, who had been governor of the island of Jersey in the English Channel; Connecticut takes its name from the Connecticut River; Pennsylvania is "Penn's Wood"; Vermont is from its Green mountains; The Carolinas were named in honor of Charles II. of England.

L. T., Elyrius, O. Is it just that the sins of the fathers should be visited on the children to the third and fourth generation?

It is a law of nature that you cannot avoid. We do not complain of injustice when we see a man gambling and wasting his estate, though we know that his wife and children will be the chief sufferers. He had an education, but his children will have to go without; he had capital to start in business, but they must work for wages.

L. E. S., Scranton, Pa. Why do you speak of the old version of the Bible as the authorized?

It has that title because King James I., of England, gave permission for it to be used in the churches. He was the head of the English Church, as Queen Victoria is, and when the revision was completed, in 1611, there were some of the clergy in doubt whether to use the older or the new version. King James's authority settled the question, so far as that any clergyman wishing to use the new version might do so. Thus it came to be known as the "authorized version."

Reader, Chicago avenue. Should a person keep a matrimonial engagement at all hazards? Could not more sin be committed by keeping an engagement made without experience than by severing such engagement before the lasting knot is tied? Is not one "broken heart" less evil than two, or perhaps the happiness destroyed of more than one family?

It is an old and perhaps fairly true proverb that "a bad promise is better broken than kept," but its too general application gives opportunity for a fickle excuse for promise-breaking, where all the obligations of honor and duty point to a different course. If, however, it should be clearly shown that the promise was a bad one, calculated to make two lives miserable, and given impulsively and without experience; wisdom would suggest its reconsideration by both parties. While there is nothing more contemptible than a disregard for an honorable pledge, there is nothing more foolish than to hesitate at an honorable avowal of one's mistake before it is too late.

Christian Endeavor Sailors

A Bethel Where the Wanderers of the Sea are Helped to Nobler Lives.

THE temptations which beset the sailors at every port are too well known to need recounting; but the efforts that are being made in the city of New York to counteract these influences are perhaps not so generally understood and fully appreciated. Since its organization in June, 1896, the Christian Endeavor Seamen's Bethel Society has steadily followed its ideal of leading the men of the sea to purer, more Christ-like ways of living, and that, with God's help, it has not failed in its purpose, may be judged from the fact that an average of five hundred sailors visit the rooms each month, while a deeper proof speaks in the altered lives of many of these visitors. Back across the sea come messages telling it is true, of the hardships of a Christian in the "devil's home, the fo'castle," but telling, too, of the strength and joy in Christ's love and service. Letters of gratitude from the wives of the men have been received, bearing tidings of changed homes and happier lives through the ministrations of the "Bethel," and it has even happened that sailors' wives have been led to know the Saviour through the loving, helpful lives of their converted husbands.

Truly it has been said that the conversion of a sailor not only gives Christ a soul, but gives to the church and the world a missionary. Missionaries on board the ships; missionaries in the ports to which they go—these have been the fruits of the "Bethel" in the short time of its existence.

A notable case of conversion and of an eventful life is that of a Hebrew lad, whose mother gave him away when an infant, reclaimed him when a boy of seven, and sent him to school. At the age of fifteen he ran away to sea, and about two years ago, while his vessel lay at this port, he was converted and became a member of the Floating Christian Endeavor Society. His Jewish relatives have disowned him, but true to his faith, he writes: "What a grand thing it is to be able to go anywhere in this world, knowing that he is with you." And again, "I have a fellow here who used to be the first and worst to torment me about my religion. . . . but he listens to me now and, thank God, I shall soon have a Christian soul." Another sailor, who became an Endeavorer, is now an assistant missionary in a large mission in Chicago and is studying to become a preacher of the Gospel.

Religious services, conducted by Endeavorers, are held at the mission five nights in the week, while on Sunday night some missionary, student or city pastor preaches a twenty-minute sermon to the men; and a social is provided for each Saturday evening. The hospitable rooms, however, under the personal charge of the missionary-superintendent, are open to the men until ten o'clock every night, and in the pleasant reading-room, with its abundance of good literature, games and writing facilities, the men find conveniences which to many of them are a novelty. The homelike appearance of the place, which, indeed, is very unlike the conventional mission in appointments, attracts the men, and is its own best invitation to them to return.

While these rooms constitute the "Bethel" proper, the work extends to the in-coming ships, which the missionary visits, giving warm invitations to the men to come and use the "Bethel," with all that it can offer; to the out-going vessels, where she distributes literature, which even the officers gladly receive, and to the hospitals, where lads sick and home-sick have come to listen to her as to a true and faithful friend.

Economy had a ruling voice in the choice of the rooms on Hudson street. It is realized that a location nearer the port would materially increase the opportunities and broaden the work of the mission, but the higher rents of that locality have, thus far, made it impossible to consider the selection of rooms which would be more convenient for the men, and hence more fruitful in soul-winning. Indeed, while money is, or is said to be, at the root of most evils, the lack of it is seriously felt by the Bethel Society and its limitations are due principally to that one condition.

This work, which is the only purely Christian Endeavor mission interest in the city, has the approval of, and has been officially commended by the Local Union of Christian Endeavor. While it is supported mainly by subscriptions from the Endeavorers, it has also received generous financial aid from outside friends, and it is hoped that, as its good results become more and more apparent, the interest of its well-wishers will increase in due proportion.

The doors of the "Bethel" are always open to those who, concerned about the welfare of the seamen, may desire to learn what is being done for those from among whom the Master chose four of his disciples. All who are interested in the work may address Mr. John M. Kyle, No. 336 Lexington avenue, New York.

We know that Christian people everywhere, where, whether they have dear ones afloat or not, care for the sailor's soul, and they know that help extended to the sailor is in very truth "bread cast upon the waters for thou shalt find it after many days."

The Moody Revival.

Great Crowds Thronged the Grand Central Palace—Many Appeals for Prayer.

THE revival services conducted by Dwight L. Moody at the Grand Central Palace from the beginning to the close attracted ever-increasing crowds, and the immense building was crowded to its utmost capacity. Many persons asked for prayers; and appeals by letter from distant States poured in. Of these letters a large proportion have come from readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Prominent preachers and laymen assisted Mr. Moody, and on March 17, Christian Endeavor Day, leaders of that association, shared the platform. Among the many interesting utterances of the great evangelist we quote the following:

LINCOLN AND THE SPY.

"One day the Union troops captured a Southern spy. There was no mercy for spies on either side in those terrible days, and the court-martial sentenced this fellow to be shot. He immediately began cursing everybody and everything. He cursed the soldiers about him, the war, the armies, his family, and the President. He seemed especially enraged against Mr. Lincoln, and cursed him all the time. The soldiers who were guarding him had pity on him at first, but now hated him, and were anxious to shoot him. As he sat in the prison one morning an officer came in, and again the spy began cursing Mr. Lincoln. 'Well,' said the officer, 'I have brought you a pardon from Mr. Lincoln.' 'What!' shouted the spy: 'what have I done that Mr. Lincoln should pardon me?' 'Nothing,' said the officer; 'if you had your deserts you would be shot; but here is your pardon. You are a free man.' The spy broke down and went away. Years afterward he was pointed out to me a mental wreck. Mr. Lincoln's kindness had broken his heart. If we trusted to merit we would never be saved. It is only the grace of God that saves us. God saves; he does not destroy. I don't like to talk about death. I am not going to die. When you read in the papers some morning that Moody is dead, don't believe it. I shall live. I may get out of this house (touching his breast), but I shall get into a better one."

THE EMPTY CHAIRS.

"When I was holding a meeting in a big hall in Philadelphia, one man told another of how 11,000 empty chairs looked. He was seized with curiosity to see them; so he went early to the door, and as soon as it was open he ran in, rushed up to the platform, and stood there and looked eagerly at the 11,000 empty chairs. Then he began wondering how the people would look in so many chairs; so he stand, and sat in the front row, where I got a good chance at him. Before he got out he was converted. The 11,000 empty chairs had been the means of saving him."

GOD ANSWERED HER.

"A woman in London had attended our meetings, and she said they comforted her so much that she wanted her boy, who was in Brooklyn, in this country, to come to hear us when we returned. She wrote to him, and he, thinking to put her off, said he would go if Moody and Sankey ever held a meeting near him. It turned out that one of our first meetings was held in the City of Brooklyn in the neighborhood where the young man lived. He came to hear us and was converted."

A SISTER'S PRAYER.

"Not long ago I met a young man remarkably active in Christian work. I asked him how and when he became converted. He told me that he had a sister of whom he had been very fond until she decided to go to China as a missionary, and then he became embittered toward her, feeling that she was carrying her religion too far. His sister taught a Sunday-school class, and one of her chief troubles before going to China was that she could find no one to take her class and keep up the good influence which she had exerted over her pupils. One sleepless night, the young man told me, he thought over his life, and decided to become a Christian. Also he decided to teach his sister's Sunday School class.

"When that young man told his sister that he had been converted, and that he had decided to take her class, it was almost more than she could believe. 'And it shall come to pass that before they call I will answer.'"

INTO A MIRROR.

"Some people say they left off going to church because there was something wrong with the church. Let them look in the mirror. Maybe they will find out what's wrong there. Of course there is no perfect church in the world. Nothing is perfect. Did you ever see a perfect horse? Just because of that you don't refuse to ride, do you? Then why shouldn't you go to church?"

THE TOUCH THAT HEALS.

"When the sick woman touched him and was healed he asked, 'Who touched me?' Maybe those around him wondered and said, 'Why, Lord, there are hundreds in the crowd who touched you when they pressed close.' They did not know the difference between the touch of the crowd and the touch of faith. But Christ knew the difference. And it is the same now. Faith can find Christ."

CROWDS THRONGING TO THE MOODY MEETINGS IN THE GRAND CENTRAL PALACE.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

Measured by Your Own Yard-stick.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Matt. 7: 2, ... { With what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again.

IN the greatest sermon ever preached—a sermon about fifteen minutes long according to the ordinary rate of speech—a sermon on the Mount of Olives, the preacher, sitting while he spoke, according to the ancient mode of oratory, the people were given to understand that the same yard-stick that they employed upon others would be employed upon themselves. Measure others by a harsh rule, and you will be measured by a harsh rule. Measure others by a charitable rule and you will be measured by a charitable rule. Give no mercy to others, and no mercy will be given to you. "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

There is a great deal of unfairness in criticism in human conduct. It was to smite that unfairness that Christ uttered the words of the text, and my sermon will be a re-echo of the divine sentiment. In estimating the misbehavior of others, we must take into consideration the pressure of circumstances. It is never right to do wrong, but there are degrees of culpability. When men misbehave or commit some atrocious wickedness we are disposed indiscriminately to tumble them all over the bank of condemnation. Suffer they ought and suffer they must, but in a difference of degree.

In the first place, in estimating the misdoing of others, we must take into calculation the hereditary tendency. There is such a thing as good blood, and there is such a thing as bad blood. There are families that have had a moral twist in them for more than a hundred years back. As some start life with a natural tendency to nobility and generosity and kindness and truthfulness, there are others who start life with just the opposite tendency and they are born liars, or born malcontents, or born outlaws, or born swindlers.

In this country we are taught by the Declaration of American Independence that all people are born equal. There never was a greater misrepresentation put in one sentence than in that sentence which implies that we are all born equal. You may as well say that the flowers are born equal, or trees are born equal, or animals are born equal. Why does one horse cost $100 and another horse cost $5,000? Why does one sheep cost $10 and another sheep cost $500? Difference in blood. We are wise enough to recognize it in horses, in cattle, in sheep, but we are not wise enough to make allowance for the difference in the human blood. Now I demand by the law of eternal fairness that you be more lenient in your criticism of those who were born wrong, in whose ancestral line there was a hangman's knot, or who came from a tree the fruit of which for centuries has been gnarled and worm-eaten.

Dr. Harris, a reformer, gave some marvelous statistics in his story of a woman he called "Margaret, the Mother of Criminals." Ninety years ago she lived in a village in upper New York State. She was not only poor but she was vicious. She was not well provided for. There were no almshouses there. The public, however, somewhat looked after her, but chiefly scoffed at her, and derided her, and pushed her farther down in her crime. That was ninety years ago. There have been six hundred and twenty-three persons in that ancestral line, two hundred of them criminals. In one branch of that family there were twenty, and nine of them have been in State prison, and nearly all of the others have come out liars. It is estimated that that family cost the county and State $100,000, to say nothing of the property they destroyed. Are you not willing, as sensible, fair people, to acknowledge that it is a fearful disaster to be born in such an ancestral line? Does it not make a great difference whether one descends from Margaret, the mother of criminals, or from some mother in Israel? whether you are the son of Ahab or the son of Joshua?

It is a very different thing to swim with the current, from what it is to swim against the current, as some of you have no doubt found in your summer recreation. If a man find himself in an ancestral current, where there is good blood flowing smoothly from generation to generation, it is not a very great credit to him if he turn out good, and honest, and pure, and noble. He could hardly help it. But suppose he is born in an ancestral line, in an hereditary line, where the influences have been bad, and there has been a coming down over a moral declivity, if the man surrender to the influences he will go down under the overmastering gravitation unless some supernatural aid be afforded him. Now, such a person deserves not your excoriation, but your pity. Do not sit with the lip curled in scorn, and with an assumed air of angelic innocence looking down upon such moral precipitation. You had better get down on your knees and first pray Almighty God for their rescue, and next thank the Lord that you have not been thrown under the wheels of that juggernaut.

But, supposing now, that in this age, when there are so many good people, that I come down into this audience and select the very best man in it. I do not mean the man who would style himself the best, for probably he is a hypocrite; but I mean the man who before God is really the best. I will take you out from all your Christian surroundings. I will take you back to boyhood. I will put you in a depraved home. I will put you in a cradle of iniquity. Who is bending over that cradle? An intoxicated mother. Who is that swearing in the next room? Your father. The neighbors come in to talk, and their jokes are unclean.

After awhile you are old enough to get out of the cradle, and you are struck across the head for naughtiness, but never in any kindly manner reprimanded. After a while you are old enough to go abroad, and you are sent out with a basket to steal. If you come home without any spoil you are whipped until the blood comes. At fifteen years of age you go out to fight your own battles in this world, which seems to care no more for you than the dog that has died of a fit under the fence. You are kicked and cuffed and buffeted. Some day, rallying your courage, you resent some wrong. A man says: "Who are you? I know who you are. Your father had free lodgings at Sing Sing. Your mother, she was up for drunkenness at the criminal court. Get out of my way, you low-lived wretch!" My brother, suppose that had been the history of your advent, and the history of your earlier surroundings, would you have been the Christian man you are to-day, seated in this Christian assembly? I tell you nay. You would have been a vagabond, an outlaw, a murderer on the scaffold atoning for your crime. All these considerations ought to make us merciful in our dealings with the wandering and the lost.

Again, I have to remark, that in our estimation of the misdoing of people who have fallen from high respectability and usefulness, we must take into consideration the conjunction of circumstances. In nine cases out of ten a man who goes astray does not intend any positive wrong. He has trust funds. He risks a part of these funds in investment. He says, "Now, if I should lose that investment I have of my own property five times as much, and if this investment should go wrong, I could easily make it up; I could five times make it up." With that wrong reasoning he goes on and makes the investment, and it does not turn out quite as well as he expected, and he makes another investment, and strange to say at the same time all his other affairs get entangled, and all his other resources fail, and his hands are tied. Now he wants to extricate himself. He goes a little further on in the wrong investment. He takes a plunge further ahead, for he wants to save his wife and children, he wants to save his home, he wants to save his membership in the church. He takes one more plunge and all is lost.

Some morning at ten o'clock the bank door is not opened, and there is a card on the door signed by an officer of the bank, indicating there is trouble, and the name of the defaulter or the defrauder heads the newspaper column, and hundreds of men say: "Good for him;" hundreds of other men say: "I'm glad he's found out at last;" hundreds of other men say: "Just as I told you;" hundreds of other men say: "We couldn't possibly have been tempted to do that—no conjunction of circumstances could ever have overthrown me;" and there is a superabundance of indignation, but no pity. The heavens full of lightning but not one drop of dew. If God treated us as society treats that man we would all have been in hell long ago!

But, you say: "I am sorry that the innocent should suffer." Yes, I am too—sorry for the widows and orphans who lost their all by that defalcation. I am sorry also for the business men, the honest business men, who have had their affairs all crippled by that defalcation. I am sorry for the venerable bank president to whom the credit of that bank was a matter of pride. Yes, I am sorry also for that man who brought all the distress; sorry that he sacrificed body, mind, soul, reputation, heaven, and went into the blackness of darkness forever.

You defiantly say: "I could not be tempted in that way." Perhaps you may be tested after awhile. God has a very good memory, and he sometimes seems to say: "This man feels so strong in his innate power and goodness he shall be tested; he is so full of bitter invective against that unfortunate it shall be shown now whether he has the power to stand."

God lets the man go. God, who had kept that man under his protecting care, lets the man go, and try for himself the majesty of his integrity. God letting the man go, the powers of darkness pounce upon him. I see you some day in your office in great excitement. One of two things you can do. Be honest, and be pauperized, and have your children brought home from school, your family dethroned in social influence. The other thing is, you can step a little aside from that which is right, you can only just go half an inch out of the proper path, you can only take a little risk, and then you have all your finances fair and right. You decide to risk it. Only a few strokes of the pen now. But, oh, how your hand trembles, how dreadfully it trembles! The die is cast. By the strangest and most awful conjunction of circumstances any one could have imagined, you are prostrated. Bankruptcy, commercial annihilation, exposure, crime. Good men mourn and devils hold carnival, and you see your own name at the head of the newspaper column in a whole congress of exclamation points; and while you are reading the anathema in the reportorial and editorial paragraph, it occurs to you how much this story is like that of the defalcation fifteen years ago, and a clap of thunder shakes the window-sill, saying: "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again!"

You look in another direction. There is nothing like ebullitions of temper to put a man to disadvantage. You, a man with calm pulses and a fine digestion and perfect health, cannot understand how anybody should be capsized in temper by an infinitesimal annoyance. You say: "I couldn't be unbalanced in that way." Perhaps you smile at a provocation that makes another man swear. You pride yourself on your imperturbability. You say with your manner, though you have too much good taste to say it with your words: "I have a great deal more sense than that man has; I have a great deal more equipoise of temper than that man has; I never could make such a puerile exhibition of myself as that man has made."

Let me see. Did you not say that you could not be tempted to an ebullition of temper? Some September you come home from your summer watering-place and you have inside, away back in your liver or spleen, what we call in our day malaria, but what the old folks called chills and fever. You take quinine until your ears are first buzzing beehives and then roaring Niagaras. You take roots and herbs, you take everything. You get well. But the next day you feel uncomfortable, and you yawn, and you stretch, and you sl—r, and you consume, and you suffer. Vexed more than you can tell, you cannot s—p, you cannot eat, you cannot bear to see anything that looks happy, you go out to kick the cat that is asleep in the sun. Your children's mirth was once music to you; now, it is deafening. You say, "Boys, stop that racket!" You turn pale from June to March. In the family and in the neighborhood your popularity is ninety-five per cent. off. The world says, "What is the matter with that disagreeable man? What a woebegone countenance! I can't bear the sight of him." You have got your pay at last—got your pay. You feel just as the man felt, that many whom you had no mercy, and my text comes in with marvelous appositeness: "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

In the study of society I have come to this conclusion, that the most of the people want to be good, but they do not exactly know how to make it out. They make enough good resolutions to lift them into angelhood. The vast majority of people who fall are the victims of circumstances.

Do you know how that physician, that lawyer, that journalist became the victim of dissipation. Why, the physician was kept up night by night on professional duty. Life and death hovered in the balance. His nervous system was exhausted. There came a time of epidemic and where families were prostrated and his nerves strength was gone. He was all worn out in the service of the public. Now he must brace himself up. Now he stimulates. The life of this mother, the life of this child, the life of this father, the life of this whole family must be saved, and all these families must be saved, and he stimulates, and he does it again and again. You may criticise his judgment, but remember the process. It was not a selfish process by which he went down. It was magnificent generosity through which he fell.

That attorney at the bar for weeks has been standing in a poorly ventilated court room, listening to the testimony and contesting in the dry technicalities of the law, and now the time has come for him to wind up, and he must plead for the life of his client, and his nervous system is ill. He gone. If he fails in that speech his client perishes. If he have eloquence enough that hour his client is saved. He stimulates.

That journalist has had exhausting all night work. He has had to read speeches and orations that kept him up a very late hour. He has gone with the exposure working up some case of crime in company with a detective. He sits down at midnight to write out his notes from a memorandum scrawled on a table under unfavorable circumstances. His strength is gone. Fidelity to the public intelligence, fidelity to his own livelihood demand that he keep up. He must keep up. He stimulates. Again and again he does that, and he goes down. You may criticise his judgment in the matter, but have mercy. Remember the process. Do not be hard.

Oh, my friends, let us be resolved to scold less and pray more!

What headway will we make in judgment if in this world we have been hard on those who have gone astray? What headway will you and I make in the last great judgment, when we must have mercy or perish? The Bible says: "He shall have judgment without mercy that showed no mercy."

I see the scribes of heaven looking into the face of such a man, saying, "What! you plead for mercy, you who in all your life never had any mercy for your fellows? Don't you remember how hard you were in your opinions of those who were astray? Don't you remember when you ought to have given a helping hand you employed a hard heel? Mercy! You must miss-speak yourself when you plead for mercy here. Mercy for others, but no mercy for you. "Look," say the scribes of heaven, "look at that inscription over the throne of judgment, the throne of God's judgment." See it coming out letter by letter, word by word, sentence by sentence, until your startled vision reads it and your remorseful spirit appropriates it: "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

A GOSPEL LIGHT ON THE BOWERY.

The Story of the Old Bowery Mission, lately Visited by Fire—A Grand Record of Rescue Work—It will Soon be Reopened and its Labors Resumed Among the East-Side Waifs and Wanderers.

SUPERINTENDENT J. H. WYBURN.

FOUNDER REV. A. G. RULIFFSON.

WHEN the sad news of the calamitous fire in the Bowery Mission became known, it awakened sympathy among thoughtful earnest, Christian people throughout the Union. Letters and telegrams of condolence came to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in a steady stream. They came from bishops, from pastors, from evangelists, from workers in every denomination, from business men and from people in every station of private life. All expressed the hope that the mission, after its baptism of fire, might soon be reconstructed and resume the work of rescue it has conducted on the Bowery during a period of nearly twenty years. Work on the restoration of the damaged mission is being pushed forward as rapidly as possible, and within a very short time services will be resumed in the Mission Hall and the old walls will once more re-echo the songs of salvation.

AT THE DOOR OF THE MISSION.

It will interest many readers to review at this time, the history of this remarkable mission. It had been the wish of Jerry McAuley, of the Water Street Mission, to establish a mission on the Bowery. Rev. A. G. Ruliffson and Mrs. Ruliffson, then engaged in east-side mission work, often talked over the subject with Mr. McAuley, and after much prayer and earnest effort, they began a mission in old dimly-lighted room at No. 14 Bowery. Almost alone at first, they found the blessing of God on their work, and it was soon necessary to seek more commodious quarters. A suitable building was rented at No. 36 Bowery, and "The Bowery Mission and Young Men's Home" was established. During the first year Mr. J. Wood Childs was superintendent, Mr. Ruffson being president.

For fifteen years the work of rescue was carried on in the very centre of vice and crime and degradation in America's leading city. To to the Bowery drifted the waifs and strays, the wrecks and delicts of humanity from all parts of the world, and to all these the Bowery Mission was a beacon light of safety in the midst of darkest New York.

With the death of Mr. Childs there was a opposition on the part of some who had supported the work, to abandon it, but finally the friends of the Mission made an appeal to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in its behalf. Dr. Louis Klopsch became convinced upon investigation that under new management and with more earnest effort, and complete and trustful dependence upon divine approval, the Mission might go on triumphantly, doing the Master's work among the struggling, the poor and down-trodden of New York. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD thereupon, in April, 1895, assumed charge of the Bowery Mission, which as now at No. 105 Bowery. Friends of the work wrote approvingly from every part of the country, from Maine to California. Most valuable assistance was also received from churches of the metropolis. From the first, indeed, the work has been most abundantly blessed.

Steps were at once taken to renovate the Mission, and fifty beds were added to the dormitories, thus providing sleeping accommodations for 200 men. A spacious restaurant was added, at which 2,000 persons were fed daily, each being provided with a wholesome meal for the price of a glass of vile liquor. The Mission never turned away the hungry and the penniless, although it did not forget that its chief object was to raise the fallen by assisting them to be helpful and self-respecting.

The Gospel services every evening, and the converts' meeting on Sunday afternoon, were the means of leading to salvation thousands who had already become outcasts, or who were on the verge of ruin and disgrace. The Free Dispensary, established Aug. 20, 1895, sent forth many a sufferer restored to health, and able to renew with fresh hope and vigor the battle of life. Altogether the mission was an institution in which Christians, the country over, took first pride as an example of what may be accomplished for the good of humanity, by earnest, sympathetic, prayerful effort—in the lines marked out by him, who "went about doing good."

The recent sad calamity recalls a touching funeral which occurred two years ago at the Mission, when two of its former inmates were borne to Mount Olivet Cemetery. "It is for us who remain," said Dr. Klopsch, on that occasion, "to continue the warfare, to fight the battle of faith, to gain the victory, to extend the boundaries of the Redeemer's kingdom; but to these two men who lie before us so silent and so cold it is farewell to trouble, farewell to temptation, farewell to homelessness, and welcome to heaven, welcome to home, welcome to eternal rest and everlasting peace." No doubt Dr. Klopsch, if here now, instead of being detained in Cuba on his mission of charity to the starving people of that island, would speak with even deeper feeling of those who perished in the Bowery Mission fire.

The Bowery Mission's work is essentially a work of reclamation and reform. It does not merely give a temporary refuge to the homeless and the stranded; its aim is to reform men in the fullest sense of that term—to make them new men, to make them Christians, to make them valuable members of society, and in this work it has met with such success as was possible under the divine protection and blessing alone. The converts rescued from their evil courses and brought to a better life through the Bowery Mission are to be found in nearly every country under the sun. Prosperous, happy, once more taking their places as respectable members of society, and leading lives which bear evidence to the sincerity of their conversion. They bear living testimony to what the Bowery Mission has been doing for mankind. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and Superintendent Wyburn, of the Mission, have received many letters from this class of converts since the fire. One writes from Cincinnati that "nothing in my experience, or in events that have come under my observation, has so touched me as the Bowery Mission fire. I shall never forget the day when, ragged and homeless, I entered the Bowery Mission, nor shall I forget the generous reception I had there, and how that reception was the turning point in my career. I am a man now, holding a good position, but the Bowery Mission will always be to me the dearest recollection of my life, and I earnestly hope that it will soon be re-opened again as a beacon for others who are, as I was, homeless and friendless in that great desert of humanity, the city of New York."

Such is the expression of numerous letters from gratetul beneficiaries of the Bowery Mission. Besides these, as already stated, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received a large number from pastors of churches, leading evangelists and Christian workers; from charitable and religious organizations throughout the country, expressing the deepest interest in the Mission, sympathy in the calamity which has visited it, and heartfelt hope that its work will soon be resumed.

There could be no adequate sketch of the Bowery Mission without mention of the work of Mrs. Sarah J. Bird, the "Mother of the Bowery Mission," as she is called; that admirable woman, who has given up the advantages of wealth and ease to labor among the outcasts of the east side. Mrs. Bird's social and Gospel services for women and girls have done good that can never be fully recorded on earth. As an example of unselfish Christian charity, she gives a high ideal of human nature, and of pure, disinterested Christianity. Mr. John H. Wyburn, the superintendent of the Mission, has also added much to the strength and efficiency of the work and is greatly beloved by all who have come under the Mission's wholesome and uplifting influence.

An outgrowth of the Bowery Mission has been the two annex restaurants, established at Nos. 55 and 262 Bowery.

Here, amid surroundings above those of most restaurants the poor may dine for a nominal sum on the best of substantial fare. Over 3,000 diners of the poorest class are fed at these restaurants daily.

Nothing could have been more impressive than the scene presented in the Annex Restaurant, at No. 55 Bowery, when the refugees from the fire at the Mission thronged its welcoming portals. Some were almost entirely without clothing, many were blackened by the smoke of the conflagration, some were weeping. Even in the excitement, not a few raised their voices in thanks to God that their lives had been spared. Superintendent Wyburn at once devoted himself to the relief of the rescued. Clothing was procured for those in need of it, refreshments provided, and no effort spared to put the men on their feet again. All were given food and lodging. Those men who lost clothing in the fire have had it replaced at the expense of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and not a few have expressed their gratitude in language all the more pathetic because it was evidently heartfelt.

MRS. BIRD ADDRESSING THE MEN.

"When will the Mission be going again?" asked a young man. "It has been more than a home to me," he added. "I came to it hungry and stranded, and, I am sorry to say, also, without any knowledge of Christ. The Mission gave me a helping hand without asking for recommendations. The Gospel services helped me to become a true Christian, and I was assisted to get steady work?" There were others like this young man. They shall not appeal in vain. Every day's delay in reopening the Mission means danger for hundreds who would have found in its Gospel services, its clean, home-like, sanitary surroundings, and its opportunities for wholesome living, the needed haven from the perils and temptations of the metropolis. This danger may well touch the heart of Christian men and women, who have happy homes of their own, but who never know the time when brother or son, allured by the glamour of the great city, may be stranded in its crowded streets, and look for some guiding and helping hand such as the Bowery Mission has always extended to the wanderer in New York.

The work of preparing to re-open the Mission is going forward as rapidly as possible, with the resources at hand, and no effort will be spared to make the Bowery Mission worthy of its past history and the high purpose of its founders. This will be good news to those friends of the Mission throughout the country, who have co-operated actively in the past in this spiritual and philanthropic work, which now more than ever calls for their sympathy and their prayers.

Metlakahatla Indians.

It may be hoped that the new effort to disturb the Indians of Metlakahatla will fail. Secretary Bliss has returned to the Senate "disapproved" the bill proposing to remove them from Annette Island and settle them on segregated lands. The Missionary Review commenting on this fact, says:

William Duncan, the able and honored missionary, to whose labor among the Indians the present prosperous, material and spiritual, condition is due, sets forth at length why the bill should not become a law. He refers to the progress the Indians now occupying the Island have made, and expresses the belief that should the bill be enacted into law all these gains would be lost to the people. What the natives crave of the government in their present condition, is protection and isolation from vicious whites. Should the measure pass, he says, it will not only injure the Indians morally, but will seriously impoverish them materially. A recent examination shows that the report that the island is rich in mineral deposits is grossly exaggerated.

Frances Willard's Last Words.

"Nan, dear, lift me up!"

It was her last morning on earth. Her friend, and Dr. Hills, her physician, raised her. She began to thank her doctor for his skill and kindness. "I shall remember your great kindness," she said, "through all eternity." She took his hand within her own thin white fingers and held it there a moment.

"Come, dear, sing my favorite hymn," to Miss Gordon, when he was gone, and Miss Gordon sang, "Gently, Lord, Oh, gently lead us." A friend came in, and she said, with a happy smile: "Dear Clara, I have crept in with mother." Her faithful heart had never ceased to yearn for this dear mother, who had passed to the better land before her.

The air was full of wars and rumors of wars, but these did not reach that calm death-bed. Asking Miss Gordon to take her picture of Hoffman's Christ to Lady Henry Somerset, she said: "Have engraved on the top of it, 'Only the Golden Rule of Christ Can Bring the Golden Age of Man.' Below engrave, 'Neither Do I Condemn Thee. Go, and Sin No More.'"

Smiling upon those around her, Frances Willard uttered her last words:

"How beautiful to be with God!"

The Sunday School

The Resurrection of Jesus.

Sunday School Lesson for April 10 Mark 16: 1-8. Golden Text, I. Cor. 15: 20.*

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

"THE first fruits of them that sleep:" "The first begotten from the dead." (1. Cor. 15:20; Rev. 1. 5.) Such were the new titles which the Lord came into as the resurrection Man, who could say of himself, "I am the resurrection and the life" (John 11: 25). There would have been no resurrection of the dead to die again no more, if he had not successfully carried his human body through death and resurrection, up to the very throne of God. Through death he brought to naught him that hath the power of death, even the devil (Heb. 2: 14 R. V.), and the Lord of Life, in whom was life (John 1: 4) became the Lord of Life, even out of death. But his death and resurrection were only the last acts and the result of a life in which he died to himself, and his own will and interests, and yet lived the life of his Father who dwelt in him. "I came down from heaven," he said, "not to do mine own will,' not to please my own self, or seek my own glory, "but the will of him that sent me" and his glory.

Throughout every day of his life on earth, death and resurrection were at work in him. He "emptied himself" (Phil. 2: 7, R.V.) is only another way of saying, "He died to himself." "I do always those things that please God" (John 8: 29) is only another way of saying, "I live unto him as he dwells in me." His death upon the cross for us would have been an imperfect atonement which would not have restored our nature fallen into the sin of worshipping self in the place of God, if he had not, in every detail of life, died to himself. And his resurrection from the dead would not have been a permanent resurrection if the Father dwelling in him had not invariably risen in his being on the ruins of the flesh, as test after test came up in his life; He did not say to Martha, I shall be the Resurrection and the Life: he was so already. His life as he dwells in us is the very life out of death which he lived, and which, when he died like "a corn of wheat" (John 12: 24) sown in the earth, he had the power to reproduce.

After his death upon the cross, and his burial in the new tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, and after the authorities had, as they thought, made the sepulchre so sure that none could interfere with the body laid there, Jesus arose from the dead. Keepers were there, but powerless to keep the Lord of Life a prisoner in the tomb; government seals were affixed to the stone which closed that tomb, but a power which was not of man dared to break them. God "sent from above, and took [him] and drew [him] out of many waters. He delivered [him] from [his] strong enemies (Ps. 28: 16, 17). The earth, which had quaked when Jesus died, quaked again when he rose from the dead, and a keeper from on high came down to roll away the stone, and displace the quaking men who had been commissioned to guard the tomb from any intruder. All that could have kept Jesus in the grave, the sins of man for which he died, had been abundantly atoned for, and no power in the universe could bind the Lord of Life; he could not be holden of death; it was impossible (Acts 2. 24). Resurrection for all the members of his body lay behind that stone in him who is the resurrection and the life, and he arose a victor. By his own death he abolished death in its victory over man, robbed it of its sting, and brought life and immortality or incorruption to light through the Gospel (II. Tim. 1: 10). Therefore already believers who are yielded up to him as crucified with Christ whose life says, "Not I but Christ liveth in me" (Gal. 2: 20), are already in a sense "sons of the resurrection (Luke 20: 36), although their bodies have yet to be transformed at the time of our future "adoption to wit the redemption of our body" (Rom. 8: 23).

The circumstances of our Lord's resurrection, as given by the four evangelists, are full of precious teaching for us. The Gospel of Mark, as usual, goes into detail. It tells us how the women, Mary Magdalene and Mary the Mother of Jesus and Salome had brought sweet spices that they might come and anoint him; anoint a dead Jesus! Minister to a departed, absent Saviour! Bestow gifts on one of whom they could expect nothing! This is the position of hundred of thousands of religious people whose prominent idea is to do, not to be, to give to God something out of themselves instead of giving him what he asks — themselves. Like the rich young man (Matt. 19: 21, 22), they are ready to do anything, give anything, practice anything which may satisfy their own hearts as to their intense devotion. But they are unwilling to sell all they have, and so put it out of their power to give anything. They will not come, take up the cross, and follow him who was crucified by being themselves crucified to the world with Christ, and the world crucified to them. The world admires devotion, self-sacrifice, lordly giving, visible self-denial, which can be "seen of men;" but it hates a religion which sells all that it has and becomes nothing and nobody; which refuses to take credit for anything and despises the world's patronage and flattery. The world has taken offence at the cross, and that offense has not ceased. The world wants man to have the credit for his religion and to have his portion in this life, in the admiration which his good deeds call forth; it is all spices and ointments to anoint a dead Jesus!

But the women looked up and there was a change. It was no longer at their spices which occupied them now "they see that the stone is rolled back; for it was exceeding great" (Mark 16: 4, R. V.) And now heavenly things began to appear to them. Entering into the tomb they saw a young man sitting on the right side, arrayed in a white robe and they were amazed. They had heard Jesus speak of his rising again from the dead, but it had left no impression on their minds, and they were unprepared for the fulfilment of his words. Scripture is being fulfilled in these days in which we live. O to be found knowing the Scriptures, and prepared for all which is coming. "Be not amazed" said the messenger from heaven, "ye seek Jesus, the Nazarene, which hath been crucified: He is risen; he is not here; behold the place where they laid him. But go tell his disciples and Peter. He goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him as he said unto you." (R.V.) The women "went out and fled from the tomb; for trembling and astonishment had taken hold upon them; and they said nothing to anyone; for they were afraid" (R.V.). But their tongues were loosed, when, on the way, Jesus met them and said, "All hail." For then they held the feet of the risen one and worshipped him (Matt. 28: 9). And when Jesus repeated the command of the angel, they found a voice and told the remainder of the disciples the glorious truth, to which they had been so blind hitherto, that Jesus was indeed risen. It is not what he was only, but what he is now at God's right hand in power, and dwelling in our hearts by wondrous grace, which occupies such as know him risen. It is his life within us which makes us know the priceless value of his death. There is a power in his resurrection which says, "All things are possible, the last stronghold of Satan upon earth has yielded to the Lord, and death is no more victorious where Christ dwells."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

BY REV. FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

EASTER is from the Saxon Eastre, the German Astra, the goddess of morn, the goddess of spring, in honor of whom the greatest festival was held. Easter cannot come earlier than March 22, nor later than April 25. It has fallen on the 22d of March but twice in 125 years, and on the 25th of April but once in 100 years. The Jews used eggs in the Feast of the Passover, and the Persians, in their March festival, had colored eggs like those the children have at Easter. It used to be that only the ritualistic churches paid any attention to the Easter festival. It is now celebrated generally by the universal Christian church. It is celebrated by special music and by joyful service in the churches. Art vies with Nature in the expression of the outer form of beauty and life the day suggests. Easter is the most beautiful bloom on the stalk of the year.

"HE IS NOT HERE: HE IS RISEN."

Mary Magdalene, etc. The evangelists have made special mention of woman's offices and affection on the first Easter morn. For some cause or other, women have been more loyal to Christ than men. Woman's nature is confiding, easy to believe God's word, and to fall upon his arm. It is sympathetic, quick to respond to the agonies of Calvary. It is affectionate, delighted to be enfolded in the embraces of Infinite Love. It is not a wonder that since the days of Christ women have outnumbered men on the church rolls two to one; that they were the last to leave the cross of Christ, and the first to find his tomb. At a critical time in the history of the Russian empire, the Czar sent for Madame Kruder and said to her: "My empire is in the balance, and I must have God's special guidance. Pray that I may have wisdom to do the right thing and save the nation." She kneeled down and prayed fervently; she and the Czar felt the answer of pe... THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

GOSPEL WORK IN ALASKA.

Where Gold Drew the World, the Love of God Drew Missionaries—A Promising Field.

OUR illustration, which is the reproduction of a photograph fresh from Alaska, will be of much interest to our readers, inasmuch as it reminds them that Gospel workers are busy in that land to which the attention of the world has been so powerfully attracted of late—that land where gold-diggers seeking gold, alas! so often found death instead. The picture shows the "log cabin" church at Juneau, the principal place of worship in the city. Juneau, on the island of Juneau, in southern Alaska, is a "city" of about 1,500 inhabitants.

One would hardly call Juneau a city as yet, but in sparsely-settled Alaska, it has already received the dignity of such a name. It is beautiful for situation, lying between snow-noble mountains and on the shore of a lovely channel; but there is nothing by any means pretentious in the appearance of its small white houses and few huts of native Alaskans. Still the gold discoverers have given an impetus to it and it may some day be a great city. It is a port at which all steamers stop, has a number of stores, and sends forth weekly newspapers containing budgets of home news, special gossip and matters of interest. Across the channel on Douglas Island is the largest gold-stamping mill in the world. It is said that missionary work progresses favorably at every point where it has been attempted in Alaska. Long before gold attracted white men there, it was a promising field for missionary labor. Secretary Seward said of the natives that "are a people gifted by nature, vigorous, energetic, docile." Others have described them as "mad after education," and "prompt to adopt white ways." The last quality finds illustration in the following incident told some years ago by Julia McNair Wright: "At a religious meeting of whites and Indians, the Indians silently observed that the white men carried their children on their arms, while among the Indians the women carried the little ones. The next Sabbath the Indian men came carrying their infants."

There are, of course, a number of native Indian tribes, beside the predominating Eskimo or Innuits (Inuits) and in this connection it is interesting to know that of two ethnological expeditions which recently left New York for the purpose of discovering through investigations among Indians north and south the origin of the first inhabitants of this continent, that while one went to Mexico, the other was bound for Behring Strait, whither two expeditions have already been sent by the Museum of Natural History. The investigators will dwell among the Indians and under conduct of native guides will dig for relics in mounds and burial places. Thus, while scientists are seeking the world's buried history through laborious excavations and praiseworthy study of Eastern lands, the past of our own country will be diligently sought for in those portions of the continent, north and south, that link it with the Old World: and perhaps the problem which has so long vexed school-children, as well as their elders, and which books and teachers cannot solve: "Where did the American Indian come from?" may find satisfactory answer.

THE "LOG CABIN" CHURCH AT JUNEAU, ALASKA.

—unfortunately they do not, as a rule, look for anything except that the child's education shall be a benefit to itself. This is right as far as it goes; but unless the child's education is a benefit freely shared with those who gave opportunity, it falls short of being a perfect blessing to the recipient in the first case. Learning and accomplishments acquired in college or university will lose nothing in distinction, and at the same time a just debt is discharged, by gracing the life of the old folks at home, who ungrudgingly provided rich privileges at the cost, perhaps, of serious sacrifices.

Washing the Idols.

"An aged Chinawoman," writes a missionary from the China Inland Mission, "has her home beside a small temple on the crown of a hill about seventeen miles from Kweiki. With the view of adding to her merit, she washed the faces of the idols in that temple for twenty-eight years. Hearing of the "Jesus doctrine," she felt that if only it were true, it would be very good; but she did not know how to test it. At length she thought, "If this doctrine is false, the idols can surely tell me so," and accordingly she asked the idols to give her a dream while sleeping in front of them. For two nights she slept there, but the idols did not respond. On the third night she told them that this was the last time she would ask, and if they did not tell her this new doctrine was false, she would forsake them and follow its teaching. This night also she slept on the floor of the temple before the idols, and no response came. From the false she turned to the true, and is now, with all her heart, looking to Jesus as Saviour. Though still living by the temple, the faces of the idols are left unwashed."

The Coronation of Wilhelmina.

All the world will be interested in the coronation of the young queen of Holland in September next. The programme of the festivities with which the loyal Hollanders will celebrate the event has been issued. Amsterdam will be in a state of festival for three days. All the communities connected with home navigation will send decorated vessels to Amsterdam, the crews of which will be attired in local costumes, and we may be sure that the streets and harbor of that ancient city of dykes and windmills will be quaint and picturesque enough with throngs of Dutch folk from everywhere in holiday attire. Three exhibitions of historical and artistic interest will be features of the joyous occasion. One exhibition will show relics, heirlooms, etc., of the House of Orange; another, national costumes; a third, the works of Rembrandt. The report that Her Youthful Majesty is engaged to be married to Prince Louis Napoleon has been contradicted. Wilhelmina declaring that she will not have a consort chosen for her till after her coronation, and that then she will choose for herself.

Saida and the Children.

Mr. Zorn, a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, sends this unique photograph, which should be interesting to little folks. It shows the good dog, Saida, pulling the sled which holds Linda, Otto, and Darwin, three young hopefuls of the Zorn household. Saida looks as if she might enjoy a run over the snow through the crisp air with her merry load, and she is certainly big enough. Perhaps she is very proud to be harnessed to the chariot of her little charges, who are doubtless her very dear and kind friends.

A NOVEL SLEIGH-RIDE.

The Sewing Needle.

Of the needle, Hawthorne says: "A queen plies it on occasions; the woman's eye that has discovered a new star, turns from its glory to send the polished little instrument gleaming along the hem of her kerchief, or to darn a casual fray in her dress. It is a token of healthy and gentle characteristics when women of accomplishment and high thought love to sew, especially as they are never more at home with their own hearts than when so occupied."

His Sixth Birthday.

He has given up his cradle and his little worsted ball.
He has hidden all his dolls behind the door;
He must have a rocking-horse
And a hard-wood top, of course.
For he isn't mamma's baby any more.

He has cut off his curls, they are only fit for girls,
And has left them in a heap upon the floor;
For he's six years old to-day,
And he's glad to hear them say
That he isn't mamma's baby any more!

He has heard his parents sigh, and has greatly wondered why
They are sorry when he has such bliss in store;
For he's now their darling boy,
And will be their pride and joy,
Though he cannot be their baby any more.

WHAT MAKES BREAD?

IT is curious to note the different materials of which different nations make their bread. The inhabitants of a limited area of the earth's surface make their bread as we do of good spring and fall wheat flour, or, as in the Southern States, of ground maize. In parts of Sweden the poorer classes bake their rye bread twice a year, and the loaves stored away become like bricks for hardness. Further north barley and oats form the basis of bread; and in Lapland, oats, with the inner bark of pine ground together and made into large flat cakes, are cooked in a pan over the fire. Kamchatkans eat a bread made of pine or birch bark, macerated and baked. Icelanders, with fine flour, made of Iceland moss, are better off. In Italy, roast chestnuts are ground into meal and made into bread. Rice bread is a well-known food in China, Japan and India. In the latter country, as in Egypt, Arabia and Asia Minor, durra, a variety of millet, is popular. Buckwheat in Siberia and some eastern countries is the staple. The bread of Persia, called "Lawash," made from rice flour and milk, is baked in thin sheets about one foot wide and two feet long, is sweet and nourishing, and sells for a cent a sheet. Armenia's "hunger bread" consists of clover seed, flax or linseed meal, mixed with grass. Starchy pith of the sago palm furnishes the bread of Molucca. Roots are ground into flour in some parts of Africa and South America. The bread of many peoples is baked or dried in the sun.

The "Dolls' Hospital."

A sign hanging from a second-story window in New York City reads that way, and the physician in charge is a cheery little German woman, wife of a man who made dolls in Saxony. "Putting a finger on," and "waxing a face over," are the two most difficult operations in doll surgery. She treats fractures and wounds of every description, and importers who send dolls, damaged in transportation, are very particular that dolly's new head, hand, or hair shall match the rest of her; but children are her most numerous, and also her most exacting patrons—especially in the matter of heads. "The children know their little dolls," says the doll-mender, "and love them very dearly. When they grow old, and scratched, and broken, the little ones can't forget that they were once rosy, and whole, and beautiful. Oh, no! It isn't that my heads are not pretty. They are not compared with the old head, but with the old head as it was when the doll was found in the Christmas stocking. That is the dolly they want again. The sign is a great help to me in my business. It brings work from the children. It makes playing with the dolls more real, you see, to have a 'hospital' to take them to. Very fine fun it is for the children, as you would know if you could see them come here, playing all the while that the doll is in a dangerous state, and needs most careful attention. I play at the same thing with them, sometimes; it's good for business, and then it is fun for me, too." Touching incidents occur when little mothers bring children so hopelessly maimed that restoration is impossible, and yet so tenderly loved that it is hard to advise burial in the waste-can.

A Crowning Benevolence.

IN last week's issue, we printed the official report of the India Government on the distribution of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Famine Relief Fund. A copy of the report was forwarded from the British Ambassador at Washington, Sir Julian Pauncefote, through our Department of State, to Dr. Klopsch, thanking him and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD contributors for their gifts. The official recognition was as hearty as the gift was munificent. One hundred and one thousand lives saved alone by the Fund. It has been one of the most colossal benefactions of this most beneficent century. No human arithmetic can compute its ultimate results.

Great as has been the physical effect of the relief, the religious effect will be still greater. Such Christly preaching as that will break up the heathenism of any nation on the earth. Every grain of corn and piece of money will tell with a tongue of fire the story of Christ's love. The relief sent in the name of the Master will save more than one hundred and one thousand souls. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who have given will also be blessed in their spiritual growth and experience, and in the accounts of the last day. Lowell, in his "Sir Launfal" makes Christ say:

Who gives himself with his alms feeds three;
Himself, his hungering neighbor and Me.

In Rome, the man who saved the life of one person was crowned with laurel, was recognized by the Senate, and allowed a triumphal march into the city. The British Empire recognizes these saviours of one thousand and one thousand lives. There is a King seated on a white throne that has taken notice of the gifts and will some day say: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, ye did it unto me." "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

The Lenten Season.

WHILE our Episcopal friends are commanded by their church law to observe Lent, all denominations are feeling the advantage of this cessation of festivities. Thank God that for forty days we are called from the outside world to the important work of introversion. The Church in Solomon's Song says, "They have made me the keeper of vineyards, but my own vineyard have I not kept." So, there are a great many Christians now who spend their chief time in looking after others, while their own vineyard goes to waste. They are raising very fine grapes on the other side of the fence, but the property does not belong to them, nor the grapes. We know Christians who are lean as skeletons in religious experience, who are running hither and thither looking after Sunday Schools, calling conventions, attending meetings. They are in everlasting ferment about other people, but have no anxiety about themselves. They cut the wool off somebody else's sheep, and spin it on somebody else's wheel, and weave it on somebody else's loom, for somebody else's back: meanwhile their own souls are shivering to death.

So there are women busy collecting money for benevolent institutions and managing public affairs, while their own children go with faces unwashed, and garments uncared for, and minds uneducated, and souls unsaved. Busy everywhere but in their own vineyard.

Now the first thing for one to do is to take care of his or her own heart. How was it that the old saints were so consecrated? They had more time for contemplation. Christians now seldom sit down to think. It is drive and push and pull. Their only quiet time is when they are on an express train going at fifty miles an hour, watch in hand, wondering why they cannot go sixty. Just before communion they feel called upon for especial self-examination, and so take the ten minutes in which they are walking to church to think what miserable offenders they have been. Now, you have no right to give so much time to your neighbor's crops that you let your own suffer. Beside, if our own piety be thin, our work will be inefficient. If we have been much with Christ, and have deep personal experience, we will do more good in one month than with a shallow experience we could do in ten years. Much of the religious effort of to-day is mere gab—the world sees straight through it—while some man who says but little, yet feels much, gets hold of the heart of an audience, and rouses and melts, and subdues, and agonizes it at will. Rickety and unsafe machinery always makes a great racket. Christians seeking no advancement in personal piety are often very demonstrative, as steamboats at the wharf blowing off steam are so noisy you cannot hear yourself speak. A man of deep religious experience is always effective. We care not how poor his voice is, or how uncomely his countenance, or how awkward his gestures, or how plain his clothes, or how lame his grammar. By taking good care of our vineyard we learn how to help others in the care of their vineyard. If you cannot raise grapes in your own garden, you cannot raise them in mine.

The Lord of the Vineyard will after a while appear at the gate. The day of vintage will come. When the grapes in olden times were gathered, there was sporting through all the land and the sound of musical instruments. What kind of clusters shall we be able to show at last in our vineyard? Will they be stunted and sour, or ripe and large? If faithful in the planting and the trimming and the watching, the vintage will be glorious. Let the messengers of God put the full clusters into the wine-press, and then with all the banqueters of heaven, the instruments chorded to the right pitch, we will drink new wine in our Father's kingdom. God forbid that ours should be the lamentation "They have made me the keeper of vineyards, but my own vineyard have I not kept."

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ, are printed in it, and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

EARTH TO EARTH.

MAN in all ages has striven either to avoid the curse of the worm, or to hide it beneath a bravery of ceremony; for even natural religion has looked always on humanity's last want as its most sacred one, and branded with infamy the violator or the neglector of the dead. The natives of Central Asia, and especially the Brahmins, have always preferred the fiery solution, and there is no story more noble than that of the young Brahma priest, who longed so ardently for divine purity and life eternal that he built of his great possessions a funeral pyre, and then leaped into the flames with the triumphant death cry—

"Thus do I make myself immortal!"

Still even in Asia the custom of burning the dead was not universal; for the Chaldeans and the Persians, who worshipped fire, abhorred it, as a pollution of their deity. The Chinese also sanctioned the burial rite, though they consumed over the grave pictures of the houses, slaves, etc., etc., which the deceased had most valued, being civilly content to offer effigies of those valuables, which barbarous nations give in reality.

The Egyptians feared fire, as leaving too little of their substance; hence they embalmed the body. The Scythians, who swore "by wind and sword," declined all interment, and made their graves in the air. The Germans, Danes, Scandinavians and ancient Britons favored the burning of the dead; but among the Greeks and Romans, both burning and burying were observed. Homer gives examples of both rites, for Patroclus, Achilles and Hector were burnt, while Priam, Polydorus and Antigone were buried, and indeed through Greek history the customs are observed side by side.

The Jewish nation, by unbroken tradition, honor the rite of burial. Adam is said to have found his grave near Damascus, and the Patriarchs all carried out the solemn sentence, "Dust thou art, and unto dust" not unto ashes—"thou shalt return." How affecting is Joseph's dying charge, and the solemn oath which he exacts from his brethren! For he knew that as a prince of Egypt he must needs be embalmed, but he anticipates 400 years off the burial of his bones with his fathers.

God, who has ordered the funeral rites of but one of all the children of men, observed the rite which commits "earth to earth." Can we imagine the tender and majestic spectacle "in a valley in the land of Moab," when the Omnipotent and the angels of heaven encompassed the solitary, hidden grave of Moses, "the friend of God?" For such a funeral, as that, who would not pray to die? It is true that Saul and Jonathan were burned, but their bones were afterwards buried, and it is evident from Amos 6, verse 10 and from other prophets that burning was used in times of pestilence or great slaughter, but it was an exception to a rule that was both individually and nationally deprecated.

It cannot be said either that the rite of burial is Mosaic, and therefore not binding upon Christians. For Christ, by his precious death and burial, disarmed the grave, purified the dead body and renewed the covenant between nature and humanity, that is—that we being made from earth and nourished by earth, should, at death, return to earth, the elements for which we are her debtors. We may remember, also, a circumstance, which invests the rite of burying with a peculiar tenderness the breaking by Mary of the alabaster box of ointment over the feet of Christ, a deed of love, which Christ declared should be told to her honor wherever his Gospel was preached, because it was the "good work" of anointing him for "his burying."

It is the glory of Christianity, that the grave is become the green altar of our faith; and the empty one of the Son of God, the earnest of our Resurrection, and of the redemption of the body. Tertullian says, that the triumph of the early Christians over death and the grave, was just the thing the pagan world could not understand, and was the occasion of the persecution of Nero. For in the first centuries of Christianity, funerals were by no means the gloomy and expensive rites they are now. The dismal hearse, and the long row of black carriages crawling through the streets, were unknown. The beloved was carried to the grave by the dearest friends; thus the Lady Paula, says St. Jerome, was borne by the Bishops of Palestine "who put their own necks under her coffin." The procession, in all cases, followed on foot; singing the glorious death chaunt of the Church; that noble song of victory, that sprung from the hearts of the first Apostles and martyrs, Thou art the Resurrection! Thou, O Christ!

The truly religious and child-like heart asks for a funeral, which shall say to all, "Now is Christ risen, therefore, all they that sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him." And as for a grave, they are content if it be in Nature's breast, on which the sun can smile, and the rain weep. When Chantrey offered Allan Cunningham a place in his splendid mausoleum, the poet answered, "No! No! I'll not be built over when I am dead. I'll be where the winds shall blow, and the daisies grow over my grave!" And this is the lullaby of Nature, with which she woos us to become nothing, for the "ecstasy of being forever" making us as content with six feet of earth as with the moles of Adrianus, or the pyramids of Cheops.

The earth and the sea are full of graves: this is one case where familiarity never breeds contempt. Wherever man sleeps the sleep of death, there the most godless acknowledge an influence which commands respect; the pious, consciously reasoning and tenderly praying.

"Pay the deep reverence taught of old,
The homage of man's heart to death;
Nor dare to trifle with the mold,
Once hallowed by the Almighty's breat

COALING A FLEET.

A NOVEL contest was witnessed recently at Portsmouth, England, during the preparation of the great ironclads for their journey to the far East. Huge quantities of coal were brought d n to the government docks to be t nsferred to the fighting engines which l gland was sending to Chinese waters t look out for her interests there. A c petition was arranged between the li ters which were employed to put the c l on board, and a prize to be given to t crew who transferred the largest quan- tf of coal in a given time from the dock t he hold of the ship. Nothing shows m e clearly the changed conditions under wch the next war will be fought than t subject of coal. These huge fighting m hines, which will play so important a pt in war, are dependent entirely on t r having access to immense supplies o coal for their engines. A ludicrous in- c nt occurred recently in Chinese waters w ch proved this. A great naval demon- s tion had been arranged which was to s ke terror into the hearts of the Chi- ne officials, and the Russian, Ger- n and English Admirals were to p ade the vessels under their re- s ctive commands on a given day: b when the day arrived the Eng- l fleet was the only one that s med out of its habors. Inqui- r as to the cause of the non-ap- p rance of the other two fleets e ited the fact that as the English a nts had bought up all the coal in t vicinity, the Russian and Ger- n fleets were unable to go to sea. Tis shows that there might occur a isis in which heavy armaments, r id-fire guns, and the skill of com- n nders and the bravery of the s ors, might all count for nothing i oal was lacking. It is well that t mighty potentates, who are lia- l to forget that they are, after all, cy men, should be reminded now a l again, that with all their power, t y are dependent creatures, and t t without the provision that God l s supplied in the beds of coal laid i the bowels of the earth thousands c years before they were born, they w uld be unable to carry out their p poses. It is true now as it was i the days of the magnificent Solo- n that no man, howsoever great h is, is independent of God.

The king himself is served by the field (Eccles. 5).

COMPETITION OF CREWS IN COALING THE WARSHIPS OF THE ENGLISH FLEET.

e Cost of a Vacation.

How much one young man considered a c ation worth is told by a Boston journal. e had worked hard for twelve months, c ering himself with the prospect of two w eks at the home of his boyhood in the c ntry. But on the morning of setting t he woke with a raging toothache. He c led on his dentist, who, after examining e tooth, declared that the filling must be t en out and the nerve treated. It would t e two weeks to properly deal with it, a d the patient must call every day. The y ung man said it was impossible: he w uld go as he was, and call when he re- t ned. But the dentist told him that w uld not do; the tooth would drive him c zy. Then he said he would have the t th extracted. That was folly, the den- t said: the tooth when properly treated w uld be perfectly sound and good, and w rth $500 to him. "Well," said the pa- nt, "if the only alternative is the sacri- e of the tooth or of my vacation, I know w ich I will do." He seated himself in e chair and bade the dentist extract it, w ich, with extreme reluctance and many o tests, the dentist did. The patient g ve a yell, expressive of pain and relief, a d the tooth came out, and he stuffed a h ndkerchief in his mouth and hurried off t catch his train. One may hope that he w s enjoyed his vacation, after making so g eat a sacrifice to secure it. It is much t be wished that people who find that something very precious to them is keeping them away from Christ and preventing them securing eternal life would show the same disposition and sacrifice it whatsoever it be, whether it is some dear connection, some habit, or indulgence, though it be as precious as a right hand.

It is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell (Matt. 5:29).

Counterfeiting in Prison.

Two men arrested at Washington, Mo., a few days ago, on a charge of passing counterfeit money, told a strange story to the police. They said they had become acquainted some time before with a man who seemed to have an unlimited supply of spurious coins in his possession. They had bargained with him for several packages of them, which they had passed, and he was always prepared to supply them as they were ordered. As they became more familiar with him, they learned that he had been taught the art of coining while serving a term in a certain penitentiary. He told them that there was a complete apparatus in the penitentiary, and that the convicts have a secret method of getting material and shipping the manufactured coins to friends outside, who put them on the market. The Government detectives have been put on the case, and are busy trying to find out what penitentiary is the one where coining is being done. It seems incredible that such work can be done inside prison walls, but the two prisoners insist that the man with whom they dealt furnished indisputable proofs of the truth of his allegation. It must be disheartening to men who think of our penal institutions as reformatory, that prisoners incarcerated for crime should actually continue their criminal conduct while undergoing punishment, and should even develop new methods of breaking the law. It shows how vain is the hope that even after death the impenitent will turn to God under the punishment that is threatened against them.

Thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved: thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction; they have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return (Jer. 5:3).

Arrested While Offering Bail.

A remarkable arrest was made in a New York police court last week. A man had been committed for trial on a charge of robbery, but the magistrate had acceded to his lawyer's request that he be admitted to bail. The prisoner sent to a friend who was a conductor on a surface railroad and asked him to go on his bond. The conductor consented and went to the court to state his qualifications and sign the papers. While he was going through the formality a detective entered the court and scanned the bondsman closely. As a result of his inspection he arrested the conductor and searched him then and there. Six pawn-tickets were found upon him, each for a diamond ring, and when the pawned jewelry was examined it was found that the rings were some that had been taken from a lady's satchel a few days before. She had dropped the satchel on a car and it had been picked up by a passenger who handed it to the conductor of the car. The satchel had been duly turned over to the lost property department of the railroad company, but the owner declared when she examined its contents that six diamond rings were missing. Where they were gone was a mystery until the pawn-tickets representing them were found on the conductor who went to court to bail his friend. Now the conductor needs some one to become his bail. Perhaps he may have some friend who is not a lawbreaker, who can do it, but, as his experience shows, anyone who has committed a crime will do well to keep away. The whole human race was in this predicament when arraigned before God, and this fact it was that made the incarnation of the Son of God a necessity for its redemption.

None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him (Psalms 49:7).

Shares in a Grandma.

A pathetic incident is told by the managers of an orphan asylum in Brooklyn, N. Y. The majority of the children sheltered in the institution are not only without parents, but have no near relatives who take personal interest in them. It is natural therefore that some distinction should be enjoyed by Charlie, one of the little waifs, owing to his having a grandmother and an uncle who are fond of him. Charlie is allowed to pay an occasional visit to his grandma and when he returns to the asylum he tells wonderful tales of her and her marvelous ability to manufacture toys for little boys out of pieces of paper, and of the astonishing stories she could tell. Charlie was repeating one morning recently what he could remember of one of these tales. He had an audience of five little orphans, whose rapt faces gave evidence of their intense interest. When he finished there were several long-drawn sighs and then the boys sat silent, thinking over the wonderful story. At last one of the boys said, "I wish I had a grandma." There was a chorus of, "So do I," from all five. Charlie thought a moment and then made an interesting statement: "My grandma would be grandma to all of you. She likes boys. She'd be glad to have you." There was some doubt as to this, but Charlie was quite sure. The talk ended in a plan to put his statement to the test. That afternoon at the play-hour, six little boys were missing from the asylum. They were sitting around a kindly gray-haired lady who had received an unexpected visit from her little grandson, with the bold request that she would be grandma to his five friends, as well as to him. She sent to Charlie's uncle begging him to go to the asylum and set the fears of the managers at rest, and then proceeded to give the youngsters a good time with stories and paper toys. They enjoyed themselves thoroughly until a messenger arrived from the asylum to escort them back. They were required to promise that they would never run away again, but they could not be induced to say they were sorry for their escapade. How widely might Christ's kingdom be extended if every Christian acted as little Charlie acted!

Go home to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee (Mark 5:19).

Buried by Installments.

A press dispatch from Girardville, Pa., to a New York newspaper reports the burial at a suburb of that town on March 18, of a man who had been the victim of a remarkable series of injuries. He was born near Detroit, Mich., and when he was twenty-one years he was thrown from a colt he was trying to break in. He sustained a compound fracture of the leg and while recovering, blood-poisoning set in which became so serious, that the leg was amputated. About a year afterwards his other leg was so badly crushed in a railroad accident, that it, too, had to be taken off. After this second maiming, he acquired possession of a wheel-chair, in which he was able to go around the town and attend to his business. Some years later, he was attending his father's funeral and had been lifted into a carriage, after the ceremony, to return home, when the horses took fright at a passing locomotive and ran away. The carriage was dashed against a tree and the crippled man was flung out. One of his arms was broken in two places, and was so severely crushed that it had to be amputated. Deprived thus of three of his limbs he lived on, until seized early this year with the sickness which has now proved fatal. It was his wish that the limbs which had all been buried in one grave should be disinterred after his death, and placed in his coffin, and this was done. The reason for such a wish is not apparent. Our hope of resurrection is not of a rising of the body that we lay in the grave but of a spiritual body which God will give us.

Thou sowest not the body that shall be ..... but God giveth it a body even as it pleased him (1 Cor. 15:37).

Blood-stained Fruit.

A recent visitor to Monroe, N. Y., found on an old farm there a strange freak of nature which the villagers explain by an ancient Indian legend. In an orchard on the farm is a tree that is knotted and gnarled by age, but still bears abundant crops of apples. They are, however, a variety known nowhere else in Orange county, nor, perhaps, in any other county. The fruit is of the size of a winter pippin, and has a similar flavor. It is golden in color, the skin being splashed with crimson spots, which also mark the apple's flesh to the core, which is of a deep blood color. This apple is known locally as the Indian Princess, and its peculiar markings are accounted for by the story of a tragedy. The villagers say that when the Indians still had possession of the Ramapo Valley and the adjacent highlands, one of their villages was located where the farm now is, and wild apples grew thereabout. One of these served as a trysting-place for an Indian maiden and her lover. The girl's father, a powerful chief, had forbidden these meetings, and when one day he saw, in spite of his order, his daughter and her lover beneath the tree, he sent an arrow through the girl's breast. The girl fell at the root of the tree and bled to death. Ever afterward, say the credulous villagers, the apples on that tree and on the trees which have been its lineal descendants, have been marked with the blood-stains. It is significant that, although in every generation there are multitudes who commit crimes which they hope to conceal, and who seem to have no fear of the vengeance of God or man, there should be so persistent a belief that stains from the blood of a murdered person are indelible. This legend of the apple-tree is only one of many such, which indicate an inherent belief in the perpetuity of the consequences of wickedness. The Psalmist declared that the blood of human sacrifices had polluted his own land.

They sacrificed their sons and their daughters and shed innocent blood, and the land was polluted with blood (Ps. 106:38).

Fighting Back Famine in Cuba.

DR. KLOPSCH SENDS CHEERING REPORTS OF THE PROGRESS OF THE WORK.

A "Christian Herald" Relief Ship Called For.

It is Needed to Visit the Neglected Seaport Towns Where No Aid Has Yet Been Sent—Our Nation Stirred by the Reports of Senators Proctor and Gallinger on the Famine Horrors—Official Corroboration of "The Christian Herald's" Reports.

The situation in Cuba at the present moment is thus succinctly stated in a cablegram received from Dr. Klopsch.

HAVANA, March 21.

This is the actual condition of affairs in Cuba at this date: Two hundred and five thousand reconcentrados, in over 400 accessible towns, are helplessly destitute. Unless we can get, regularly and without a break, 300 tons of cornmeal and fifty tons of lard or bacon every week we can not give effective relief. Spasmodic and unsystematic efforts simply defeat even the best intentions. Canned goods are useless and condensed milk should be substituted.

Fifteen thousand dollars weekly will feed every starving man, woman and child in Cuba. Small, irregular consignments of food for relief purposes are only tantalizing and accomplish but little good.

LOUIS KLOPSCH.

CUBA'S tale of sorrow and suffering has more than ever been the theme of the American statesmen and people since the recent presentation in the United States Senate of the report of Senator Proctor, of Vermont, upon the famine and its attendant horrors. The Senator had just returned from an extended trip to Cuba, whither he went to observe the actual facts concerning the suffering. His statement to the Senate was perhaps the most remarkable document ever read before a deliberative assemblage, and was listened to with the utmost attention. He described the pitiful condition of the peasant reconcentrados, 400,000 of whom were penned up in the cities and towns. Thousands built little huts in the suburbs and in vacant places, where they lived and died like animals under a pestilence, amid foul air, earth and water and with food or none, as happened. "One-half died, and one-quarter of the living are so diseased that they cannot be saved." He describes the terrible mortality in language that causes the reader to shudder. One notable passage says:

"I went to Cuba with a strong conviction that the picture had been overdrawn, and that a few cases of starvation and suffering had inspired and stimulated the press correspondents.

"Before starting, I received through the mail a leaflet published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, with cuts of some of the sick and starving reconcentrados, and took it with me, thinking these were rare specimens, got up to make the worst possible showing. I saw plenty as bad and worse—many that should not be photographed and shown."

He found enough to convince him that 200,000 had perished within a few months from actual starvation and diseases caused by insufficient and improper food. He visited Los Fossos, the municipal shelter, and fully confirms the description of its fetid horrors. He saw there 400 women and children emaciated and in rags, lying on the stone floors in all stages of disease. The conditions in other cities, he declares, were even worse. Of the relief work generally, he spoke in the highest terms.

Several other prominent American statesmen, lately in Cuba, have within the last few days made public statements concerning the suffering among the native peasantry in that unfortunate island, which far exceed in terrible pathos and harrowing detail anything that has appeared in the columns of this journal. United States Senator J. H. Gallinger writes: "Pictures of wretchedness and anguish were photographed upon my brain that will never be effaced." All concur in the declaration that it is impossible for human eloquence with tongue or pen to adequately picture the suffering and misery in Cuba as they now exist, and that the relief work is the only agency from which alleviation of the present prevailing misery may be looked for.

A POOR COUNTRY GIRL VICTIM OF FAMINE IN LOS FOSSOS.

How the relief work goes forward Dr. Klopsch describes in his letters and cablegrams received during the week. His dispatches sent by cable give assurance that it is "progressing finely," and that many new points are being reached. Relief stations are now open at Pinar del Rio, Matanzas, Havana, Cardenas, Sagua la Grande, Cailiarien, Cienfuegos, Trinidad, Manzanillo, and Santiago de Cuba, and from these cities supplies are sent in sufficient quantities to the interior wherever the suffering is the sharpest. In this way Dr. Klopsch has arranged to reach a large number of smaller towns and villages, where the famine has already claimed many victims, and whose people have been conducting a hopeless fight hitherto. He has made since his arrival in Cuba a remarkably thorough canvass of the famine provinces. The official schedules show that over 200,000 persons on the island are in need of relief, but the actual number is unquestionably much larger. Twelve thousand rations per day are now being issued in Havana alone. In view of the difficulty of reaching many points in the interior of Cuba with the supplies from Havana and the urgent need of these localities, it is now proposed to send a special steamer from New York laden with cornmeal and other suitable food, to make a tour of the famine towns other than Havana along the coast. This is absolutely necessary, and the need is so great that it could not fail to bring a blessing on all who were interested in this effort to relieve so much misery. The vessel would load in New York, and, flying THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund flag, would probably clear for Cuba late in the present month or early in April. Meanwhile heavy shipments of food are being made by every steamer. Last week 500 tons of cornmeal and 100 tons of bacon were shipped on Dr. Klopsch's order. The vigorous extension of the relief work, following his arrival in Cuba, has already been the means of rescuing many from the fate that would have overtaken them had not the distribution of supplies been expedited.

SLEEPING RECONCENTRADOS IN FRONT OF LOS FOSSOS.

Dr. Klopsch writes as follows:

HAVANA, March 10.

This was a great day. In the morning, immediately after breakfast, consisting of strong coffee and acidulous rolls, we drove to the large warehouse, where the goods contributed by the United States for the relief of the starving multitudes of Havana are stored. Owing to a quantity of cheap jewelry, which had been shipped with the stores, the custom authorities had refused to permit anything to leave the warehouse until Governor-General Blanco could be persuaded that the little case had accidentally, and with no intention to defraud the customs, been shipped with the supplies. This had been accomplished yesterday, and late last evening Consul-General Lee had received a letter from Senor Congosto, secretary to the Governor, removing the embargo. This letter was intrusted to me, and on the occasion of my visit this morning I had the pleasure of handing it to Mr. Elwell, who showed it to the authorities, and this closed the incident.

At the warehouse I met Miss Barton and her coadjutors, and with them we drove to the outskirts of the city, where, in order to greatly economize on the living expenses, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD forces in Cuba have hired a house, in which they all live, and from which all relief expeditions emanate. There we lunched, and then visited THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Orphanage. It is a large building, completely surrounded by a beautiful garden, with an exceptionally large, detached kitchen, laundry, and a very spacious bath-house. As we entered the garden we found a large group of about eighty invalids, awaiting their turn for treatment in the dispensary, opened on the ground floor. "One and see," said Miss Barton.

Wall got into our carriages, and after half ur's brisk driving we reached "Los ss," the "municipal shelter." In the ourt-yard, around three sides of which ilding now infamous throughout the ld world is erected, were about eight d half-famished, half-naked men, wo- nd children, waiting until the rations, composed of United States supplies, e doled out to them. On the floor, in a large square room, about feet, we found in one corner, lying on r and covered with filthy blankets of a rown color, about a dozen men and most of them very sick—two with al fever, one with pneumonia, one an le, and one old woman, with snow-white oubled up so that only with difficulty one distinguish the human form. I had a cry myself, and as I pen these lines my are so filled that I can hardly see what I iting. Dr. Lesser addressed the woman gently and asked permission to take the child to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Orphanage. She hesitated a moment. Then she looked at Miss Barton, who, with a kind glance, encouraged her to say "yes." At last she consented, and steps for the immediate removal of the child were at once taken. Then we went into another large hall, where about 200 men were just preparing to take up their quarters for the night on the floor. The Congressional party were visibly affected at what they saw, and if they make public their observations, the American people will not rest until one million dollars have been contributed for the relief of these helpless, innocent victims of the internal struggle going on in the Pearl of the Antilles.

And yet this place, horrible as it is, is a heaven compared with what it was before the generosity of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers made it possible to send Clara Barton here. Then there were twenty deaths a day—now only five or six a week. Surely our noble band of contributors will have the blessing of him who said, "I will be a husband to the widow and a father of the fatherless," resting upon them.

AN INTERIOR IN LOS FOSSOS, WHERE HUNDREDS WERE CROWDED.

To-morrow I am to have a long conference with General Lee, who takes a very active and hearty interest in the work which the grand people whom he so ably represents here are conducting on this unhappy isle. The people of Santa Cruz del Nord, twenty-five miles from Havana, are so awfully destitute that every dog and cat in the place have been eaten. Here it is said that the limbs of the people are actually decaying and that not a single family of the 3,000 inhabitants still left has enough for one square meal a day. The Alcade, or Mayor, is now here in Havana, pleading for help, and I have decided to hire a tug and take down a lot of supplies; but more of this after I have been there.

The Governor of Havana says that he would shudder to contemplate the inevitable fate of the poor of Cuba should the United States discontinue the relief supplies.

It is very important that we get clothes. Literally thousands here are walking the streets more than half naked, and many altogether so. We want clothes, also, for our babies in the Orphanage, and clothes for the women at Los Fossos, not to mention the requirements of men in the same direction. All we want is garments in one piece—a dress that can be thrown over the head to drop full length over the body. The need is great; may the supply be proportionate.

Mrs. Klopsch has just gone to visit the Montgomery. She wept for hours last night at the recollection of the sights she had seen, and I was afraid she would get sick. Hence I do not take her to-morrow to Matanzas. Personally I feel that I have seen enough, but I am determined to visit every centre of destitution that time will permit. L. KLOPSCH.

One result of Dr. Klopsch's visit has been a division of work which will make it much more satisfactory hereafter. The Red Cross will henceforth devote itself exclusively to hospital, asylum, and kindred work. The Distribution Relief Committee arranged by Dr. Klopsch, now consists of Consul General Lee, Dr. R. Guzman, representing the Cuban committee, and Mr. J. L. Vandewater, secretary of the Western Railway of Cuba, representing the American contributors. General Lee will act as arbitrator in the event of a difference of opinion between the other two members. Relief has been sent to 134 central points, from which 462 towns and villages have been supplied. Corn meal is the principal ration. Dr. Klopsch has appointed three men to travel through the island verifying the count of the needy, and seeing that supplies are properly received and handled, preventing fraud and generally aiding in the work.

The King's Daughters' Sewing Circle at No. 17 Astor Place, last week shipped 750 garments to Cuba for the needy and nearly naked reconcentrados. They will send 1,000 more garments during the present week. This excellent branch of the relief work was established by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD two weeks ago. Contributions of cotton, linen, muslin, and calico goods are earnestly solicited.

Our illustration on the front page of this issue shows a scene at Los Fossos during a visit by Mr. Klopsch to that most miserable of all sections of Havana. At Los Fossos the reconcentrados were dying at the rate of over 100 a day before the relief work was introduced there and the place cleansed and made habitable. Rags, filth, and disease prevailed, and the skeleton dead lay beside the bony living. Now it is presentable, the most appalling cases of misery have been relieved, and though many of those who are sheltered there will doubtless die of famine-weakness, it can be truthfully claimed that the horrors of the place have been abated.

Every contribution will be duly acknowledged in these columns. The latest contributions to the Fund are published in this issue.

THE YOUNG MEN OF CROYDON CHURCH.

THE STORY OF A . . . PASTOR'S EXPERIENCE

By . . . Bishop John H. Vincent, D.D.

HERE is a question in which all parents, educators, and reformers feel intensest interest. And well they may. It is the question concerning young people between twelve and twenty years of e- e winning, the retaining, and the g of them in home and church. If ere the church is weak it is at this Arthur Manning had his way of g at and of handling the problem. Epworth League was working well. spirited, popular, and useful: the course good, the prayer-meetings the Junior department flourishing, did not satisfy him. He said: "I boys' club—a young men's club. I must work for them and with And it must be in an organization r own. They have a self-consciousness and a sex-sensitiveness, which render ossible for them to reach their best associated in religious and church ith girls." His wife answered: Why not organize one?" "No," plied, "it must not be organiz- t must grow." Manning called s tea-table and study one g the members of his "Church ." who represented, respec- the "Senior Department" and e issionary and Aggressive De- ent." At that sitting it was d to get a grip upon a few of e iows of intelligence, who are t ully satisfied with the Ep- League and Christian En- r, and who might do so much good to and through these people's organizations if they emselves enthusiastic in an- form of young men's work. will not organize," said Man- "We will get hold of strong fellows, one by one, and let gu 'society,' 'club,' or whatever e ay call it, grow into a social eligious power in the church. at a time' shall be our motto." er looking about, Manning t of Albert Lawton, a young of eighteen, clerk in a large graduate of the Croyden High Sc ol, gifted, sensible, a little skep- fond of dropping in now and e to the Protestant Episcopal ch, partly because of his old olmasters, who attended that th h, and partly because he likes rder of the service and the e ent silence which prevailed . Lawton belonged to the Ep- League, but lacked enthusiasm. lyton has ability, and is in a position to in and to influence others. I must him," said Arthur one day. "Then are Sinclair, and Maybie, and Wil- If I control Lawton, I can secure and a half-score like them, and what a p r such a group of manly fellows would be the League and the church. I shall ta my time and develop 'one at a time.'" wton was invited to spend an even- with the pastor in his library. The fire burned brightly as Lawton came in A brighter light shone in Manning's ey and the handshake had heart-warmth in Tea was served to the two, and th talked for two or three hours. The co ersation, apparently unpremeditated as spontaneous, was really in pursuance of definite plan prepared in advance by active pastor. It elicited Lawton's p onal history, his ambitions and plans, h objections to certain forms and phases o hurch life, his real love for a positive, in ligent and aggressive religion, his d rmination to be a decided Christian, h perplexities concerning views about t Bible and certain "doctrines" held by t average church member, and his a oyance at the slovenly way in which s many church services were conducted. A ull hour was spent in talking about the h ory, doctrines, policy and usages of t church—the itinerary, the class-meet- in (Manning called it the "classmates' eting,") the doctrine of the "witness of the spirit," and the wonderful power of Jesus in history, literature, ethics, society, government, and especially in the personal character, experience and life of a man who gives himself up to the imitation of Christ in a true and rational sense. It was a conversation packed with thought. Manning gained more light on what kind of preaching he needed to give and more material for sermons than he ever gained in any month at the theological seminary. After the long talk they kneeled, and both prayed.

At the parting Manning handed to Lawton two books, which he urged him to read: "The Character of Jesus," by Horace Bushnell," and "The Tongue of Fire," by William Arthur. "May I come back some evening?" asked Albert. And the pastor said, "One week from to night if you choose."

And he came. That evening Manning read to Albert several fine passages from "Quo Vadis," showing how ardent, simple, spontaneous the experience and life of the church of the first century. "So like our own meetings at their spiritual best."

"TEA WAS SERVED AND THEY TALKED FOR SEVERAL HOURS."

said Lawton. Then Manning read the first chapter of the "Acts of Apostles" in Robert D. Weekes' "The New Dispensation," and talked about their "exultation and praising God with sincerity (simplicity) of heart," and about "those who were being saved." The discussion of Dr. William Arthur's story of Pentecost in "The Tongue of Fire" was full of enthusiasm and power. And together they prayed for tongues of fire!

At the parting Albert Lawton said: "There are two or three of our young fellows I should like to have you know better, and I want them to know you and to be helped as I have been helped." "Bring one of them next week," said Arthur, "and another the week after."

"One at a time works well," remarked Manning to his wife four months later as he came in from the front door, where he had said good-night to twelve of the best and brightest young fellows of his church and congregation. "We have had a warm, strong, glad time to-night. We spent forty minutes on the "true Christian life" as set forth by Paul in his letter to the Ephesians: forty minutes on the rise and development, and radical errors and elements and power in the Church of Rome, and of the sacerdotal fallacy: and then forty minutes in discussing plans and work, especially among the neglected, frivolous, dissipated young men of the community. It was a meeting of power and blessing. I am sure we make a blunder in taking young men on too low a plane. They are more sensible, more mature, more manly than we think. It is so easy to slip into juvenile ways of talking to them, and of providing for their entertainment. To-night four of the fellows brought facts about the early development of the sacerdotal elements in the church and of the papacy. I am confident that in the Protestant conflict with Rome, it is a mistake to use harshness and invective. If the simple, uncolored facts of history are not enough to hold Protestant youth to the evangelical school of the faith, abuse and bitterness will not do it. One of the fellows to-night gave quotations from 'Quo Vadis' to show how 'Methodistic' the early Christians were. Albert Lawton said: 'I told Father Ryan last Monday that I had found out that the Church of Rome in the beginning was Protestant, that is, an evangelical church. The priest smiled and called me a dangerous heretic.' My club is a success," he added. "The rule of 'one at a time' did it.

I leave my readers to imagine the influence on Croydon Church of this growing body of intelligent, enthusiastic, devoted, practical, unnamed club.

INDIA'S PEOPLE FED.

How the Relief Distributed by the Missionaries is Helping the Work.

IN a letter just received from Rev. Richard Winsor, the American Board's Missionary at Sirur, India, an eloquent tribute is paid to the generous work of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and testimony is given to the permanent value of the services which were accomplished through their munificent gifts. Still more welcome is the news Mr. Winsor gives that the people whose lives were saved, and the people who witnessed the relief work which delivered their fellow countrymen from death, are now listening with an earnestness never seen before, to the Gospel message. It is clear that the gifts of Christian people who had no motive for giving but the spirit of Christ, have so impressed these Hindoos as to give them a new view of Christianity and have removed some of the prejudices they had against the Christian religion. Mr. Winsor writes:

"The year 1897 was a year of years. We were in the midst of Famine and Plague. The pen of a ready writer would be needed to describe the want, suffering, and wretchedness, much of which, as we saw it here, can never be made known. When there was not much prospect that we would be able to furnish relief the scenes began to be beyond endurance. But the splendid gifts from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of New York and the help received from other sources, nerved us and equipped us for the great work there was to do, and it has been a work, indeed!

"In all we had 5,737 rupees from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and 2,636 from Lord Radstock's committee of 'The Christian Succor to India Fund,' and 2,791 rupees, besides grain, from various other sources. These sums, thank God, put it in our power to do for so many of these people that which, as they declare, kept them alive. Oh, how many times have I bowed in thanks to the Almighty for thus making us the channel of this good to those who so thronged us.

"For months our whole time was given up to the work which afforded us opportunities of becoming acquainted with the people, and of putting the truth before them as nothing ever before enabled us to do. The people have been blessed, and everywhere pour out their thanks for what has been done for them. We kept well in mind the idea of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, viz., to make the relief work as far as possible of public utility and benefit, so then we took in hand the digging out and deepening the reservoir at Karegao, a work which is of greatest use, and a great joy to the people, and again the four miles of road between Kondepuri and Telegar was put into good order, rock dug out, some little blasting, and over an impassable hill, a road made so that it was easy to cross: this too has given great joy to the common people of all castes, whose thankful expressions would make any, who have sent their contribution, happy. Yes, we thank God that by the generous supply from Christian people there has come to these afflicted ones comfort in their distress and need. The effect has been wonderful, villages to which we could not gain access, have been open, the hearts of the people touched, and we made most welcome and they seem to long to have us near them.

"Oh how this terrible Providence has melted the people, how gladly do they listen to the words of life, and now is our way open as never before to send the messengers of peace among them. There is more opening for Mission work than ever before."

GONE TO HIS REWARD.

Dr. Alexander McLean's Life of Faithful Service to the Cause of Christ.

THE American Bible Society has suffered a sad loss in the death of Rev. Alexander McLean, D.D., which occurred on March 19, at his home in West Thirty-fourth street, New York. For more than twenty-four years Dr. McLean has devoted his life to the service of the Society as one of its secretaries, and his colleagues who have labored with him know how faithful and conscientious he was in the discharge of the duties of the position. Dr. McLean was in his sixty-fifth year when he died. He was born in Scotland, but came to this country in his boyhood. He entered the ministry of the Congregational Church while still a young man, and for several years was pastor of a church at Fairfield, Conn. Later he accepted a call to the pastorate of the Calvary Presbyterian Church of Buffalo, N. Y. In 1874 the American Bible Society elected him one of its secretaries, and since that time he labored zealously in its service. During the past few weeks he was confined to his house by the severe sickness which terminated in his death. Dr. McLean leaves a widow who is a daughter of Rev. Edwin T. Hatfield. Two daughters also survive him.

HELPFUL ANECDOTES

By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D.

Growing Sweeter with Age.

OLD violins in general produce their tones with much less effort on the part of the player than is necessary for new ones. In the latter there is a certain stiffness and lack of ready response, which wears away slowly with time and use.

Long-sustained tones from a new violin may sound quite as well as from an old one, but when rapid runs and chords are played the superiority of the mature instruments is very evident to the listener. The tones of all violins become mellower with age and use. When new they have a certain thickness or woodiness of tone, which, in most of them, degenerates into an actual harshness, but which, in the best ones, is so slight as to be detected only by those who are accustomed to hearing high-class old instruments. Where this woodiness is very marked the violin seems to the player to have a very powerful tone, but to the listener stationed at a little distance, the tone may sound very weak. Stiff-toned, heavily-wooded instruments are usually the most harsh and raw in tone when new, and it takes these a longer time than more thinly-wooded ones to acquire mellowness of tone. The human heart is like a violin. When taken up with the things of the world it has a worldy tone that may sound very strong and splendid to the player (that is, the man himself), but people who look on, feel discord. Our hearts ought to be like violins, also, in that they grow mellower, and sweeter in tone with age. An old man or woman whose heart becomes mellow with heavenly notes as they draw near to the end of their journey, is the most splendid testimony to Christianity, for the devil has no happy old people.

A Father's Love.

When the steamship Australia was preparing to leave San Francisco the other day for the Klondike, an observer on the dock had his attention specially called to the farewells which two fathers gave their sons.

One strapping young fellow wrung the hand of an old man of military bearing. "Well, Jack," the father said, "I wish you all kinds of good luck, and, my boy, whatever you do, don't drink!" A moment later, with a gulp in his throat, he said: "Good by. I can't stand about here, or I will lose my courage and beg you to stay." And with another handshake he was gone.

Another young chap was given "Godspeed" by his old father, and the parent's voice broke as he said: "Now, George, you know there is always a good home to come to if you don't strike anything. Don't stay up there and suffer because of any false pride. If you can't get a fortune this season, come back. You will have as good a show here as many others, and you can always count on a good home!" How much it means when the good Book says to us: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him."

The Tragedy of "Thirstland."

The last work executed by the great artist Millais has just been published. It is called "The Last Trek," and the original is in black and white. It is considered one of Millais' masterpieces, and a complete evidence of his genius, for in its simple lines is everything that goes to make up sublime pathos and consummate art:

The story is a common one among the pioneers of Africa. A white hunter who had braved the blasts of the desert and the perils of the hunting veldt for many a season, at last falls a victim to the poisonous climate of the African spring, and is seen dying in a lonely "Thirstland." Tended to the last by his faithful Zulus, whose love for their master is that of children towards a father. The scene is laid far away, where the foot of white man never trod before, and one sees the game even pause to gaze at the strange figures and their surroundings. The tragedy of the Thirstland of South Africa portrayed in this picture, suggests the many travellers in the Thirstland of worldliness who, weak, are dying untended and uncared for, for lack of the Water of Life.

The World's Rose-Tree.

One of the most interesting curiosities of Germany is the rose-tree at Hildesheim, which is more than a thousand years old. Its existence can be traced back to the time of Charlemagne, and it is a fact that it was mentioned as a curiosity in old chronicles of the ninth century.

It twines round a large part of the ancient Cathedral of Hildesheim, near Brunswick, and with its countless blossoms presents in the season an entrancing spectacle. This venerable witness from bygone ages has been attacked by some insidious insects that threatens it with destruction. The Hildesheimers, to whom the roses are a sacred heirloom, have summoned the best authorities in arboriculture to their aid, but the fate of their tree fills them with anxiety. The greatest rose tree in the world is the Rose of Sharon; it has been blooming for more than eighteen hundred years, and its fragrance is fast filling the whole world. It has not remained in the land where it first was planted, like the rose of Hildesheim, but like a great banyan tree, it has run its roots under the sea and come up in distant lands, but whether in the tropics, or in the arctic midnight, it bears the same kind of blossom, and its beauty and fragrance are not affected by the climate. Many a vile insect has sought to destroy it, but it was never so strong and never so full of blossoms as now.

Humanity's Mountain Top.

In a southwestern town a crowd was gathered before a store window. Inside was a magnificent white-headed eagle. There was a chain from its right foot to a huge piece of iron, some water in a pan, an untouched piece of fish, a few sods, and a large card with the words: "For Sale." The big bird's wings drooped on either side to its feet:

Its eyes were glazed and dim-looking. It opened and shut them now and then, but never once turned them to the jostling, noisy crowd that stood just outside the glass. It was a pathetic picture of fallen greatness. Suddenly a strong, vigorous young fellow pushed himself through the crowd, and stood looking in silence, but with evident interest at the great helpless bird. He was sure he had seen it before. He overheard some one say in the crowd where it had been captured. That settled it in his mind; it was the same bird. He had seen it on the mountain where he sometimes had hunted for a stray sheep. He knew the big pine in the top of which it had its nest. He had noted it soar majestically and free above him as he worked in the valley. The young mountaineer elbowed his way into the door and enquired, "What do you want for that bird?" "Two dollars," was the reply.

"Very well; I'll take him." He paid over the money, and the bird was handed out to him. The crowd in the street watched eagerly as the mountaineer came out with the big eagle under his arm, and went straight across to where a ladder leaned against a bill-board that was some ten or twelve feet high. At the foot of the ladder he stopped, and took the chain from the bird's leg; then he went slowly up, and placed his old friend on top of the bill-board and came down. The great bird had been a prisoner so long that it seemed for a time to have forgotten how to be free. It sat for a while as it had sat in the window. But gradually it came to itself. It lifted first one drooping wing and tucked it closely to its side, then the other. It raised itself slowly to its full height, and stretched out its great head toward the sky. The dullness went out of the eyes, and a fierce new light flashed in; then, nervously stretching out its huge pinions on either side, and taking a step or two forward, it rose with a hoarse scream and swept out toward the sun. A burst of applause from the crowd met the mountaineer as he recrossed the street. He simply said, "I had seen him on the mountain, and I couldn't bear to see him there." So the man who has really seen humanity in Jesus Christ, and has felt the glory of manhood on the mountain top of Christ's nobility, can never be satisfied to see any man degraded and chained by sin and impurity.

Persistent Coughs

A cough which seems to hang on in spite of all the remedies which you have applied certainly needs energetic and sensible treatment. For twenty-five years that standard preparation of cod-liver oil, has proved its effectiveness in curing the trying affections of the throat and lungs, and this is the reason why: the cod-liver oil, partially digested, strengthens and vitalizes the whole system; the hypophosphites act as a tonic to the mind and nerves, and the glycerine soothes and heals the irritation. Can you think of any combination so effective as this?

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Be sure you get SCOTT'S Emulsion. See that the man and fish are on the wrapper.

To be relieved of this dreadful distress! This is what people say who suffer from indigestion and dyspepsia. There is relief and cure for such cases. Others have found it in Hood's Sarsaparilla, why not you? The peculiar toning effect upon the stomach, the restoration of the digestive operations and the sharpening of the appetite so that one may again enjoy the good things of life, have won for Hood's Sarsaparilla the grateful thanks of thousands of men and women all over the world. For example, read what Mrs. Bump says:

"For over 20 years I suffered from dyspepsia. I felt as though there was a lump in my stomach. I did not dare to eat meat and could not eat warm bread. I was obliged to eat very sparingly of vegetables. I would often go hungry and did not eat all I wanted, fearing the great distress it would cause me when I satisfied my appetite. I felt despondent and depressed after eating and had pains through my chest, resulting from gas in my stomach. I read what Hood's Sarsaparilla had done for others and I decided to try it. I was relieved very soon after I began its use. My appetite increased and my general health improved. I gained in weight and the stomach trouble was cured so I can eat without distress, and I enjoy the best health I have had for a long time. I never weighed so much in my life, and the benefit from Hood's Sarsaparilla is permanent. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as an excellent remedy for dyspepsia and other ills." MRS. B. W. BUMP, 45 Portland St., Middleboro, Mass.

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy anything else instead. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best blood purifier and stomach tonic and there is no substitute for Hood's.

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

A prominent physician writes:

Dear Sirs:—Replying to your request for my opinion as to the use of Tartarlithine as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that, in my practice, the verdict is unanimous in its favor. In every case I have used it in the treatment of gout, I have had a dozen cases with results that are more than satisfactory, in fact less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity, completeness and promptness with which patients begin to improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was a gentleman that of a physician suffering from rheumatism, along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best work which he had accomplished for years.

ERTS TOUCHED BY CUBA'S WOES.

ver the Little Children are Aiding the Good Work.

ANY tender words and kind letters have come to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during the week, accompanying gifts for our Cuban Relief work. We give a few extracts below: They are very expressive.

TWO LITTLE NEBRASKA LADS WHO HELPED CUBA.

A. T. B., Elgin, Ill. ($3), writes: "My heart was moved to pity for those poor Cubans in their great distress.

With $1.00 came these words from a sister in Christ, Minden, La.: "I am sorry it is not a thousand times more and that I would gladly give that much if I had it."

M. C. A. G., Denver, Colo. ($2): "I take THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and read much of the sufferings of the poor starving Cubans. I am a widow, but I can send my mite for the love of Christ."

"It is not much, but I know every little helps," writes Mrs. S. L. W., of Riverside, Iowa (50 cents). "This is for the poor starving people in Cuba; it is one-tenth—the Lord's money—I give it for him and send it in his name:" Armstrong, Iowa, $1.50.

E. Peterson ($2), asks us "To accept this offering for the Cuban Relief Work." "Wish I had more to send," writes Mary ..., Red Cloud, Neb. ($1).

Mrs. F. N. S., Corydon, Ia., sends $2 to purchase food for some poor Cuban child," and says, "We have been nursing our little baby through a long sickness: she was reduced in flesh to a mere skeleton, but now, through God's kindness, and my care, she is improving. When I think of those poor babies away off in Cuba, without any food or care, my heart goes out to them."

A friend (K.), Clarksburg, Md., sends $2, with "God's blessing for those sufferers." Sterling, Ill. ($2): "I wish it were more, but I send it with my prayers and in his name." A "Sympathizing friend," of Salun, N. C., sends $1 to aid the suffering Cubans.

The East Haven Society of the Christian Endeavor, through their treasurer, send $9—"trusting that it will do a little towards relieving the sufferings of the starving poor in Cuba." "May God direct this little offering to the right place;" this little prayer comes with $2, from Lizzie W., Lockhaven, Pa.

The First Presbyterian Church of Newark, N. J., the pastor of which is the Rev. Francesco Pesaturo, received through him, the pamphlet issued by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in behalf of the Cuban sufferers, and were so deeply touched by its account of the starving reconcentrados, that their hearts opened in response to the appeal. The pastor brought the matter before his congregation at their prayer-meeting. A collection amounted to $5.

Thousands of American children all over the land, whose hearts have been deeply touched by the recital of the sufferings of the Cuban children, are now working nobly for the Fund. Every mail brings gifts from those dear young friends — many of them gifts of self-denial and severe economy, and all of them gifts of love.

Two little lads of Blue Springs, Neb., Charley Wonder and Carmon Basore, cousins, each seven years old, became very much interested and were happy when their mothers told them they might do what they could to help relieve the suffering ones. One bright morning, they started out with a small express wagon, and in it a large clothes basket. After canvassing the little village all day they were very tired, but also very glad and happy over the success of their undertaking. The result was a large basketful of light clothing, some tea and oat-meal, and $5 in cash. Our photograph gives a glimpse of the brave little fellows as they looked that evening, after drawing their load for many hours.

Another interesting instance comes from Roxbury, Mass., Miss Annie S. Burpee, in forwarding $10.50, for the Cuban Relief Fund, from the children of the Primary Department of Berkley Temple Sunday School, Boston, writes:

They gave over twelve dollars toward the India Fund, and I wish, from time to time, to interest them in giving to such worthy and needy objects. Every child who gave is to be presented with a copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, containing the acknowledgment of our gift. The gift sent by this little band of seventy-five children represents, on the part of the majority, true sacrifice.

The Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.—Free to all Readers.

All readers will be glad to know that the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, has proved an assured cure for all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood or by disordered action of the Kidneys or Urinary organs. It is a wonderful discovery, with a record of 1200 hospital cures in 30 days. It acts directly upon the blood and kidneys, and is a true specific, just as quinine is in malaria. Rev. W. B. Hott, D.D., of Washington, testifies in the New York Christian Witness that Alkavis completely cured him of Kidney and bladder disease of many years standing. Many ladies also testify to its curative powers in disorders peculiar to women. So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 13 Fourth Avenue, New York, are the only manufacturers of this new remedy, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative powers.

The Mules and the Light.

The following story of an incident in a mining country, show how even the lower animals of God's creation love to come "from darkness into light." Perhaps the keen delight of these poor beasts may stimulate our own appreciation of the beautiful blessing enjoyed by rich and poor alike:

Six mules that had for thirty years hauled cars in the lower workings of the Sparland coal shaft, near Lacon, Ill., were brought to light recently, says an exchange. In all that time the mules had seen no light stronger than the flicker of the Davy lamps the miners carried. The sun was in the zenith when they reached the surface. The astonished mules shut their eyes to keep out the flood of light, and kept them tightly closed while they were led to the pasture lot, a mile distant, and turned loose. There they stood trembling, as if something evil were about to befall them. Presently they half opened their eyes and peered around them in amazement. When they had become accustomed to the sunlight they elevated their heads. Toward sundown they broke into a chorus of joyous brays. After a quarter of an hour of that music, they took to kicking, jumping, whirling around like teetotums, and rolling on the sod, as if they had gone mad. The sun and pure air were more to them than food, and they refused everything put before them to eat.

THEY RIDICULE IT.

MANY PEOPLE RIDICULE THE IDEA OF AN ABSOLUTE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA AND STOMACH TROUBLES.

Ridicule, However, is Not Argument, and Facts are Stubborn Things.

Stomach troubles are so common and in many cases so obstinate to cure that people are apt to look with suspicion on any remedy claiming to be a radical, permanent cure for dyspepsia and indigestion. Many such pride themselves on never being humbugged especially on medicines.

This fear of being humbugged may be carried too far; so far, in fact, that many persons suffer for years with weak digestion rather than risk a little time and money in faithfully testing the claims of a preparation so reliable and universally used as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Now Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are vastly different in one important respect from ordinary ptoprietary medicines for the reason that they are not a secret patent medicine, no secret is made of their ingredients, but analysis shows them to contain the natural digestive ferments, pure aseptic pepsm, the digestive acids, Colden Seal, bismuth, hydrastis and nux They are not cathartic, neither do they act powerfully on any organ, but they cure indigestion on the common-sense plan of digesting the food eaten promptly, thoroughly before it has time to ferment, sour and cause the mischief. This is the only secret of their success.

Cathartic pills never have and never can cure indigestion and stomach troubles because they act entirely upon the bowels, whereas the whole trouble is really in the stomach.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, taken after meals, digest the food. That is all there is to it Food not digested or half digested is poison, as it creates gas, acidity, headaches, palpitation of the heart, loss of flesh and appetite, and many other troubles which are often called by some other name.

They are sold by druggists everywhere at 50 cents per package. Address Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich, for book on stomach diseases, or ask your druggist for it.

With the increase of wealth and luxury there comes an increased demand for a better and safer cleansing agent for household use. A large number of housekeepers have discarded the ordinary yellow soaps and are now using only a pure soap of the best quality. MRS. S. T. RORER, widely known as an authority on the selection and preparation of food and other articles of household consumption, says:

"In looking over the field I am sure that the housewife can afford without a second thought to throw away her alkali powders, drop her ammonia bottle, and use Ivory Soap for all purposes, with far better results than could be obtained from combinations of which she knows but little."

AFTER DEATH.

Conquering the Fear of Death (John 8:51-54; Phil. 1:21-26).

"Among the things revealed to Paul when he was caught up to the third heaven and heard words, which it was not lawful to repeat, there must surely have been something relating to the condition of the soul immediately after death. We cannot believe that he would have written to his friends at Philippi the words associated with the topic, unless he had good ground for them. It is evident that if he considered himself only, he would have preferred death to life. That fact is full of significance. It is also full of encouragement. Here is a man full of energy, of intense mental activity, clear-sighted, intelligent, learned, declaring that so far as his own interests are involved, it is far better for him to be dead than alive. He is content to wait God's time, because so long as he is living he can help his friends, but that appears to be the only reason which attached him to life. What could he have seen or heard that made death so attractive? The Christian, suffering under bereavement, or approaching the close of life, naturally turns to the Bible to see what it tells of that bourne from which no traveler returns, and there are few who are not disappointed. There are plenty of directions as to duty while in this life, but little to gratify our curiosity as to the next. A declaration, therefore, like this that Paul makes is particularly welcome. Whatsoever the conditions of existence in the disembodied state are, they must evidently be very desirable. We cannot imagine, for example, that they involve a sleep in the grave, a period of unconsciousness. Such a condition would not have appealed to so active a man as Paul. Nor can we imagine anything like Purgatory. Paul writes of departing and being with Christ as if the one involved the other. He writes, too, as one who knows whereof he speaks, not like a man who is balancing probabilities. It is useless to speculate, to try to imagine what kind of life that must be, in which without eyes, or ears, or any of the bodily organs, which we have depended on so long for pleasure and gratification, we shall still live and see and hear and know. How this must have been, Paul must have understood, but he has not attempted to explain. He presents us with the result, and knowing the character of the man we may well be satisfied with that. There need no longer be for any Christian grief for those who have gone before, or apprehension for himself, when a man like Paul puts on record the statement that the future life is far better.

Carrier Pigeons in Naval Service.

William E. Curtis, writing in a Chicago paper, says:

"Carrier pigeons will be used by the United States navy for serious business for the first time in history during the maneuvers of the North Atlantic fleet in the Gulf of Mexico this month. For several years Lieut. Charles H. Howe, who was a commissioner to Chile for the World's Fair, has been engaged in hatching and training cotes of pigeons at various points along the Atlantic coast where there are naval stations, from Portsmouth, N. H., to Key West, and during the summer months he made many successful experiments in sending messages by wing to and from these stations and also from ships at sea. The longest distance thus far covered by a carrier pigeon is 350 miles. The messages were sent from the flagship New York at sea, while off the coast, to the navy yards at New York and Norfolk, but these were merely tests. When the fleet left Key West for the Gulf of Mexico the other day a cote of pigeons from that station was taken on the flagship, and it is the intention of Admiral Sicard, for whom Lieut. Howe is now acting as an aid-de-camp, to send daily reports to the station at Key West by pigeons, to be telegraphed to the Secretary of the Navy at Washington. Pigeons have been successfully used for some years by the European navies, and are becoming important agents of marine warfare.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

About Spring Flowers—The Open Fire-place—A Letter From Maine.

YOU must not think because so much of the space given to us every week is taken up by letters that we do not often hold our pleasant meetings. We get together occasionally. The Minister's Wife came in the other day, bringing with her a lovely little bunch of trailing arbutus. Of all the sweet flowers which come with the Spring, I think that I love the arbutus best. You find it growing modestly close to the ground, and often you have to push the pine-needles away, or the brown leaves; and there, allured first by the pure, clean fragrance, you discover the dainty petals, waxen white and shell pink, nestling in the shelter of their leaves. The Doctor's Niece rushed up to the Minister's Wife and begged for a spray of the arbutus, and then we put our heads together to see what pleasure we could give to others by sharing some of our own.

There is old Aunt Martha Jane Perkins, who fell on the ice in February and hurt her knee. She has always been a very active woman, and the confinement, to which she is quite unused, has worn upon her terribly, so that her family are quite disturbed because of her unhappiness. We decided to send her a little box of arbutus with our love, feeling sure that the flowers would tell her something about the Father's constant care, and would, in their own sweet way, be a comfort and help. Then we remembered Ellen Vale, who is suffering from an obscure malady in her eyes, which threatens to make her blind. For the last three weeks Ellen has been a prisoner in a darkened room. When we have had opportunity, we have gone for a few moments to cheer her by a visit, and Emily Bean, who is always thoughtful, went last Sunday afternoon to sing for Ellen's pleasure. Of course, Ellen, poor thing, cannot look at the flowers, but their very presence in her room will be a benediction, and we decided to send a few to her. After that, the Schoolmistress suggested that Mary Black, who is a saleswoman in a great shop on Broadway in New York, and who never sees our country village any more, except in August, when the grass is all burned up with the sun, and whose vacations are only a week long any way, would be delighted if we sent her a little box of arbutus. You get the idea, do you not, that what the Minister's Wife had in mind was that we should take our simple flowers and make them messages of cheer to friends in need.

A MOTHER writes to ask what shall be done in case the drapery in a room takes fire, or how one should best put out the fire if it catches a child's clothing. Fire spreads so quickly that one needs great presence of mind in dealing with it. If possible, a curtain or lambrequin which has been ignited, should be pulled down and the fire stamped upon or stifled by throwing over it a heavy quilt, carpet or rug. Always stop the draught, if you can, in such a case, by shutting doors, and remember to act with promptness, for the fire races on with great fury and rapidity, and, in a moment or two, may be beyond putting out by the means at hand. If a person's clothing takes fire, the thing to do is to roll over and over on the floor. Throw a heavy coat or rug about the victim and hold the flames in closely. Great care should be taken to keep children from playing with fire. It has an immense fascination for them, and they so love a blaze that they can hardly resist the temptation to play with matches; but they should be taught that these are never to be touched, and, if needful, and they can be restrained in no other way, the little, meddling hands should be punished. Grown people, too, are very careless and often fail to take the precautions they should. Before an open fire in a room where there are children, there should always be a wire screen. One has many narrow escapes through the facility with which matches in these days break off. I was lighting the gas myself last summer one night, when the match I was using broke in two and set fire to the sleeve of the gown I had on. A member of the family rushed to me and put it out at once, so I escaped with nothing worse than a ruined garment, but it might have been serious. The wife of the poet Longfellow died many years ago from injuries received by the burning of her dress through a spark which fell from sealing wax which she was using. For the slight burns, or the more serious ones which occur in the household, remember that one must always cover the injured part from the air as soon as possible, and nothing is better for this purpose than flour applied quickly to the place until the pain is soothed. Linseed oil and lime water is also an excellent remedy. Very likely some of my friends can suggest better remedies even than these old-fashioned ones. If so, I shall be glad to hear from them.

A BEAUTIFUL letter came to me the other day from one of my friends who lives in the great State of Maine. She says: "No doubt, you have heard the expression, 'five miles from a lemon,' but I can beat that, as I am thirteen miles from a lemon. As I write, we are all in mourning for the Maine and her gallant crew. We feel so badly about the disaster. She was our own ship, the flower of our navy, and named for our dear pine-tree State. How I wish you could come to Maine in the summer or the autumn. There is no place exactly like it in all our broad land. We raise apples as big as small pumpkins here. I sincerely hope that we may never see a war either with Spain or any other nation; that all troubles between nations may be decided by arbitration."

Let us all hope that there may be a dignified and honorable method of composing the difficulty; that it may be found that the great battleship was lost by accident, and not by wicked intention and act of a treacherous enemy. All Christians must deplore the necessity of wars and conflicts, and pray for the time when peace shall rule on all the earth; yet our Lord himself said, "I came not to send peace, but a sword;" and an old prophet once exclaimed on an occasion of patriotic interest, "If any man have no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one;" and there are times when the only way to peace is through the red tide of battle. I thank this dear friend for her most beautiful letter.

Big Drop in Bicycles.

Last year retailers succeeded in reducing the price of all $100 00 Bicycles to $75.00, and they held the trade at home; but what are they going to do now when a new 1898 Bicycle is offered at $5.00, on easy conditions; other latest models at right at $13.95 and $19.75, on free trial. It appears the monopoly on the finest grade seamless steel tubing has been broken and where the best tube alone for a bicycle formerly cost about $18.00 is now reduced to less than $4.00, and SEARS, ROEBUCK & Co., of Chicago, at these special prices are waging war on all bicycle dealers. They send a bicycle catalogue free to anyone who asks for it, and we are told are shipping several hundred bicycles every day to every state direct to the rider at $3.00 to $19.75 on free trial before paying. SEARS, ROEBUCK & Co. continue to wage the cycle war throughout the season it will be a boon to all those who want bicycles, but a sad blow to cycle dealers and manufacturers.

LIVING HOPE.

ster hanksgiving and the Reasons For It (I. Peter 1 : 3-4).

Peter's conception of the Christian's future is a very beautiful one. It is one of birth. The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, he says, begat us again unto a living hope. How different this n he assurance of the scientist, that e die, there is an end to us! RIST'S RICH FOLLOWERS.

Wi Use of Money in Holding it at Ch t's Service (I. Timothy 6: 17-19).

Christ's attitude toward wealth was one of the most significant features of his wonderful character. There is little doubt that the home at which he stayed at Bethany was comparatively wealthy. w was sufficiently well-to-do e im a great feast. Zaccheus, also, s idently a rich man. Nicodemus s all probability a man of substance. d a house of his own in Jerusalem mplies a certain degree of pros- and it is confirmed by the fact eing of "the kindred of the High es" Yet so far as we are informed not require of any of these that p themselves of their possessions. e that there was one man whom he t he must give all away if he would his disciple; but that was a man ought himself perfect and by the "What lack I yet?" challenged to point out a flaw in his character. the man, in order to show him that ere as at least one sacrifice he could ke, he made the demand that he o all he had. Christ's eye was ed to character and the question of or poverty was as extraneous as his or the color of his hair. The fact with entered into his estimate only affected character. So it is still.

Among Christ's followers are many wealthy men. That there are not more is due to the fact that money has an insidious habit of getting hold of the heart-strings. As soon as a man perceives a duty which he recognizes, but which he will not do, because of the amount of money it will cost, that man is in danger. When a man will pay out money freely for the relief of the destitute, or for Christian enterprises, God sees that he can be trusted with money and he gives him more. But when he sets his heart on acquiring and hoarding, when it grieves him to part with it even for the benefit of his brother or of the church, then his character has deteriorated and Christ's words are against him. It really is hard for the rich man to enter the kingdom of God, but it need not be. No man howsoever rich he might be would be hindered if he were willing to sacrifice it all. The sacrifice would not be required of him, but the willingness is.

THERE SHALL BE A RESURRECTION.

JESUS speaks in time of sorrow,
And his blessed peace imparts,
In the desolated homestead.
He will comfort broken hearts.
Praise the Lord! 'tis not forever
That the friends of life shall sever—
There shall be a resurrection by and by.

There are buds that have been blighted,
There are hopes that have been killed,
Many wrongs are still unrighted,
Many longings unfulfilled.
For the treasure that was cherished,
For the beauteous bud that perished.
There shall be a resurrection by and by.

Tho' the heart with grief be broken,
And the lips with sorrow dumb—
Faithful is the promise spoken:
Resurrection time shall come.
Every comfort that was taken
Shall to life and love awaken—
There shall be a resurrection by and by.

Look beyond the night of sorrow—
There shall come a blessed day—
There shall be a glad to-morrow.
When the night has passed away.
Weakness, loneliness, and sadness
Shall be changed to strength and gladness—
There shall be a resurrection by and by.

Why is it every sarsaparilla which tries to sell itself, ranges itself against Ayer's as the standard? Why is it that all have to offer extra inducements—bigger bottles, fancy wrappers, cheaper price—anything, everything, but the one inducement of quality? Quality tells.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

has never been equaled by any cheap imitation of it.

"I have sold Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla for more than twenty-five years, and have never heard anything but words of praise from my customers. A preparation must possess great merit to maintain such a reputation. I believe your sarsaparilla to be the best blood purifier. I often hear other manufacturers say that this is "as good as Ayer's." They always set Ayer's up as the standard of excellence." — S. F. BOYCE, Duluth, Minn.

The Only Thing Needed

To Remove Bronchitis, Catarrh, Consumption and Pneumonia

From the List of Dangerous Diseases is the Education of the People.

Ever since the discovery that catarrh, bronchitis, pneumonia and consumption were purely local diseases, caused by the presence of bacilli in the air passages, the medical profession throughout the whole world have bent all their energies to finding some method or remedy by which these bacilli could be reached and destroyed. How they have succeeded is best told by a glance at the reports published by the different boards of health in all the larger cities in this country, which show not only a great increase in the number of deaths yearly from these diseases, but a startling growth in the number of persons afflicted. This failure to find a cure for diseases of the respiratory organs must not be construed to mean a lack of ability on the part of the medical profession, for they have discovered many remedies which would kill these germs. Yet, strange to say, not one of them could be conveyed to the parts affected by dry air. It can be readily seen, then, that the discovery of "Hyomei," a germicide of sufficient power to kill at once the bacilli of these diseases, and at the same time volatile enough to impregnate every particle of air breathed by the patient, yet leaving it free from moisture, was one of vital importance to the medical world. Doctors throughout the whole country began to test the efficacy of this new remedy, and now, after two years' trial in hundreds of cases under their own care, over 3,800 physicians claim that "Hyomei," the Australian Dry Air Cure, is the only treatment by which all the diseased parts of the respiratory organs can be reached and cured.

Furthermore, it is claimed that in families who are predisposed to catarrh and consumption, if the fathers and mothers will but instruct their children in the use of "Hyomei," the rising generation will be freed from those dread diseases. It would seem, then, that nothing remains to be done in order to remove these diseases from the list of dangerous ones but to teach the people the value of "Hyomei."

Prophecy in the Pentateuch

How the Glorious Hope of the Modern Church Was Outlined in Early Ages.

By Rev. W. J. Erdman, D.D.

THERE are certain expressions in these five books of the Bible which involve the Personal and Pre-millennial Coming of Christ: their fulfilment demands a time or a dispensation still future to us. Especially in Genesis are found the seeds and beginning and typical forms of all the fulfilments and consummations of the great Messianic future, revealed in the Apocalypse.

In Genesis 3 : 15 is the germ and mysterious outline of all prophecy concerning the enmity and conflict of the two seeds whose representatives have been in evidence in every age, but whose final personal manifestation the world will witness in that crisis toward which our race is rapidly moving — the crisis coincident with the return of our Lord.

In Genesis 3 : 24 is evidently implied a guarding, but much more a keeping and preserving of the tree of life; and yet later scriptures tell when and by whom the way to it shall be opened again, and Eve's great primal hope, Genesis 4 : 1, of a restorer of a paradise lost, at last after weary, waiting centuries be fulfilled.

In Genesis 5 : 24 is found the brief note touching a man who by thousands of years anticipated the highest form of redemption; that awaiting such as shall be alive at our Lord's return. In the light of typical and prophetic scriptures it is evident Enoch lived in the beginning of the crisis of the world before the flood. His prophecy in Jude is of the coming in judgment which is preceded by a translation.

In Genesis 5 : 29 comes before us the man who passed through that crisis. His deliverance was earthly, that of Enoch heavenly; one vertical, the other horizontal; the one corresponding to the rapture, the other to the apocalypse in judgment; one of heavenly calling, the other earthly, yet both men of God. He, too, was looked upon as the bringer of the promised rest, the remover of the curse: but the greater than Noah is yet to come; and before he comes and when he comes, the corruption and the judgment of the world shall be as in the days of Noah, Genesis 6 : 5-8.

In Genesis 12 : 1, 22 : 18, the seven-fold promise to Abraham and his seed contains the most magnificent hope ever known among men, and the secret consequently of all the contentions and plottings in the patriarchal families. And the promise of land and heirship of the world still belong to him, the seed of Abraham, who once came to his own possessions and his own people received him not, but who in due time will come again, to be acknowledged as heir and Lord at last.

In Exodus 3 : 14-15, 6 : 2-3 is given the great memorial name to be forever attached to the everlasting covenant as the pledge of all fulfilments, and these as seen in Genesis lie in the great Messianic age to come.

In Numbers 24 : 7-9 is foreseen the King and kingdom to be exalted. In 24 : 16-24 is outlined the whole course of human history until Messiah comes again. In Deuteronomy 18 : 15-19 is foretold the great Prophet who would speak with authority, who once came and spoke on earth, who is still speaking from heaven, and who is coming again to judge them who obey not his Gospel (Acts 3 : 22-23).

In Deuteronomy 32 : 1-43 we have the "compendious outline and the common key to all prophecy." It is the mould of Jewish and Gentile history; it confirms (32 : 8-9) Israel as the head and heart of the human family; it foresees Israel's apostasies to Gentile idols and Israel's punishments by Gentile hands; it declares the unchanging mercy of God according to the promises made to the fathers and announces the judgments in turn to come upon the proud, self-deifying Gentile oppressors and usurpers, and finally through Israel's deliverance, all the blessings which were foretold in Eden, and afterward promised to Noah, to Shem, to Abraham, shall come upon all nations.

Thus we see that the redemption of man is no experiment, no after thought, but the result of a plan extending through the ages revealed more clearly as the centuries passed.

"The Crucifixion" Drawing.

In a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. mention was made of what may prove to be a most valuable archæological discovery in the Palace of Tiberius on the Palatine Hill in Rome. It is a drawing representing the Crucifixion of Christ. The London Graphic's correspondent sends a most interesting description of the find. The picture is scratched on the level of the ground. close by the side of one of the passages which lie under the structures adjoining the Bridge of Caligula. in the immediate neighborhood of the Clivus Victoriæ. The building is usually a gallery made by Caligula. to connect the Palace with the Forum. The corridor where it stands is so dark that a distinct photograph is impossible. It measures several feet in height. Professor Lanciani. the Director of the Egyptian Museum at the Vatican. to whom the discovery is due. claims that the scene represented is that of the Crucifixion. and he contends that the drawing was scratched on the wall by one of the soldiers of Pontius Pilate's guard who took part in the Crucifixion on Golgotha. He also claims that this is the first authentic record that has yet been discovered of the actual scene of the Crucifixion. He backs his contention by pointing out that. whereas in the drawing there are four figures named besides the one called Filetus, which Professor Marucchi takes to be Pilatus. St. John's Gospel speaks of four soldiers. The "Crestus" is already known as a rough Roman form of the name of Christ. Certain lines would appear to have been written under the word "Crestus" after the drawing was made. and if the latter represents the Crucifixion cannot possibly relate to it. Between the verses. and apparently written by the same hand that wrote the word Crestus. are the following words, as nearly as they can be deciphered:—

"GRAFITO" OR CRUCIFIXION DRAWING.

Virgis exact cœsus secretis moribus
Super palum virum fixum.

"Virgis cœsus." are a proper expression for "scourging with rods." and the words "super palum" may be accurately used to describe a death on the cross.

The Grafito (as the drawing is called) is puzzling the archæologists. Some contend that Professor Marucchi is mistaken. Professor Marucchi holds to his theory. A great point is made of the fact that behind the central figure there seems to have been a third cross. for it is still possible to distinguish a third ladder running at the same height as the others. and also a third rope hanging downwards like the others.

Mr. Moody's Love of Music.

The organist at the Moody meetings for a time past has been Victor Benke, who is the regular organist of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Every Mission. Concerning his services. Rev. A. Dixon writes: "Mr. Benke is almost indispensable to the Moody meetings."

WHAT IS YOUR FORTUNE

A woman's hand tells the tale!
If it is smooth and white it shows she uses her head to save her hands—that she uses to do her cleaning. If her hand is rough, wrinkled and shrunken, it shows she is still using the old soap and soda combination.

GOLD DUST WASHING POWDER

Why don't you use Gold Dust Washing Powder?

We direct special attention to the following remarkable statement.

For eighteen years I was not able to do any work, was confined to the house three years, eyes were weak and discharged great deal of mucous, was deaf in right ear, suffered intensely with pain in head, had fainting spells, often thought would lose my mind. Eighteen months ago used Aerial Medication, in two weeks hearing was fully restored, Catarrh gradually subsided, and in six months was entirely cured. I feel like a new person.—MRS. KATE ELLEGOOD, 2221 Walnut St., St. Louis, Mo.

We have reliable assurance that the above statement is genuine and that Dr. Moore is a reputable physician.—Cincinnati Christian Standard.

Easter Morning

"AWAKE AND SING YE THAT DWELL IN THE DUST." (Isaiah 26: 19.)

Easter morning; budding flowers;
Light is dawning, life is ours!
The Sun of Righteousness ariseth
With healing in His wings.
Music from on high surpriseth
Earth with heavenly things.
Like an echo, all nature sings;
From far below the cadence rings;
Christ is risen, to-day rejoice!
Angels listen to human voice.
Resurrection—all is well
In our world—Immanuel!

OUR MAIL-BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Box. 60, Southern Pines, N. C. Please give name of the author of the poem beginning Sometime, when all life's lessons have been learned.

The poem is by Mrs. May Riley Smith.

W. D. R., Nepesta, Colo. 1. When were New York and adjacent towns consolidated into Greater New York? 2. Give names of boroughs?

1 The charter for Greater New York was signed by the Governor, May 4, 1897, and went into operation Jan. 1, 1898. 2. Bronx, Manhattan, Brooklyn, Queens, Richmond.

F. L. S., Orion, Wis. Who are the reconcentrados?

They are Cuban farmers and agricultural laborers in the interior who were forced to leave their homes and crops and submit to being penned up in certain cities.

A CHRISTIAN HERALD reader, H. E. H., Gratersford, Pa. It is thought that the ship Maine might have been exploded by a submarine mine. Would you please tell us what a submarine mine is?

A submarine mine is a machine loaded with dynamite or other high explosive, and sunk under water. It is connected by electric wire with some point on shore, and can therefore be exploded by the pressure of a key from the shore, unlike a torpedo which explodes by concussion with an object striking it, or against which it is aimed. If the Maine was blown up by a submarine mine, some one on shore must have pressed a key, and sent the electric current through a wire to the mine, causing it to explode with the appalling results already known.

E. F. B., Schenectady, N. Y. The statement has been made here that the money sent through the General Relief Association in New York and Washington goes for the Spaniards and not for the Cubans, and I would like to know if that is so.

The story is unfounded. Every precaution is taken to prevent any diversion of the fund or supplies to other than the actual sufferers.

Reader, Albany, N. Y. What is the relative strength of the Japan or Russian navies?

According to latest Congressional reports "the development of the Japanese navy since the war is not to be described as progress; it is a cyclone, Japan being second only to England in naval activity, being ahead of France, much in advance of Germany, and vastly in the lead of Russia and the United States." For exact figures, we refer you to Congressional Record, March 24, 1898.

J. E. W., Wellington, Ohio, writes:

In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Feb. 16, the question is asked, "Where in the Bible is life compared to the path of an arrow?" In Psalms 18: 14 you will find it.

Our correspondent's interpretation is wrong, as the passage quoted refers to the arrows of the lightning, and not to human life. The passage enquired for can be found in the Apocrypha in Wisdom of Solomon 5: 12: "Or like as when an arrow is shot at a mark, it parteth the air which immediately cometh together again, so that a man cannot know where it went through."

In your opinion has the rented pew to free pew system failed? 4. Is it well to employ a regular canvasser, or is it better that the pastor and officers of the church do the canvassing?

There is much to say on both sides of the question, which is one of vital interest to every church. Some find the free pew system a success, but in most cases it puts the pastor under the necessity of constantly appealing for funds to carry on the work of the church. Others, where great spiritual activity prevails, find the system satisfactory in all respects. On the other hand, where conservative methods are followed, reasonable pew rents, supplemented by the envelope system, are found the best. A family, and even individuals, like to have their own pew in the church. This combination of pew-rents and envelopes obviates continuous begging and usually places the church on a sound financial basis. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would be pleased to have the opinions of its readers, clerical or lay, on this question, each writing from personal experience.

Some of our readers have written asking to be informed what they, with their small means can do toward helping Cuba. A gift of one dollar will do much. It will supply cornmeal rations for a whole day to a hundred persons, cornmeal being one cent a pound. It will provide a bacon ration to twenty persons, with bacon at five cents per pound. It will feed a family of five persons for nearly ten days, each member receiving three-quarter pounds of cornmeal and one-quarter pound of bacon daily. It will keep one person alive on these rations for over forty days. It will afford milk and bread for a little famine boy or girl for nearly thirty days. Many letters are received, asking information regarding the famine. To all who send for it, our illustrated Famine Pamphlet will be mailed free.

They will, perhaps be pleased to hear that since that time a church of forty-six members has been organized at Bogue, through the efforts of J. E. Wallace, evangelist of Lemmon, Neb. Nearly all our dear young people of Bogue and vicinity have come to Christ and been saved on the terms of the Gospel. We have received a number of periodicals and some books, for which we extend our sincere thanks.

S. E., Perryville, Md. 1. Do you think that a person who, in a fit of ungovernable rage, and when almost crazed by pain, cursed God, can ever hope for pardon? 2. Do you think that a member of a church, a teacher in Sunday School, would be justified in marrying a man who takes no interest in religion though he is willing to go to church occasionally and promises not to put any difficulty in the way of her attending to her religious duties?

1. We believe that such a sin, if sincerely repented of, would be freely forgiven. 2. Your own heart must answer your question. You who know the character of the man so much better than we can know it from your description, are in a better position than we to judge whether the difference between you on the matter of religion would prevent the cordial relations which should subsist between husband and wife. As you have probably been reminded, the Apostle Paul cautioned his readers (II. Cor. 6: 14–18), against being unequally yoked with unbelievers, but he was referring to idolaters whose religion was abominable, so that the passage does not seem to apply to such cases as the one you describe. There are some men so near to the kingdom of God, that association with a godly wife may win them to Christ, but you only can judge whether your influence is likely to succeed in this case.

J. E. J., ——. While living in a distant town I united with a church of a different denomination from that of my father, in which I had been brought up. Returning home now, ought I to continue in the denomination I joined, or should I return to the denomination in which I was brought up?

It would depend on your reasons for making the change in the first instance. If on going to a distant town you united with another denomination because of a change in your conviction and because you believed that the principles of that denomination were more scriptural than the one in which you were brought up, the reasons which impelled you to make the change should keep you in the denomination you chose, unless you have changed your mind again. On the other hand, if the change was made merely because you liked the preacher, or because your new friends belonged to that denomination, we see no impropriety in your returning to the church of your youth.

AN IMPRESSIVE FUNERAL.

A Great Gathering Attends the Obsequies of the Men who Died in the Bowery Mission Fire—Vicar Kimber's Touching Address.

ON Wednesday morning, March 23, the last words were said over the mortal remains of nine of the unfortunate men who perished in the Bowery Mission fire: and they were laid away by loving Christian hands in Mount Olivet Cemetery, Long Island. The funeral services at St. Augustine's Chapel, No. 107 Houston street, were conducted by the Vicar, Rev. Arthur C. Kimber, and his assistants Rev. G. A. Mck.Dyess, Rev. William Du Hamel, and Rev. C. M. Beers. St. Augustine's Chapel, between the Bowery and Second avenue, is one of the East-side missions of Trinity Parish. A near neighbor to the Bowery Mission, it stretched out the hand of Christian help and sympathy as soon as the disaster was known, through its Vicar who immediately wrote, offering the chapel and his services in the last sad office for the dead. Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, the Rector of the famous and historic old Trinity Church, confirmed this action in a letter of earnest condolence.

REV. DR. A. C. KIMBER.

Long before the hour for opening a great crowd had gathered in front of the doors, despite of the murky weather and dull skies that seemed ready to weep for the nameless dead. Uniformed police guarded the imposing entrance of the church, like kindly sentinels, to regulate the movements of the crowd, which was a very orderly one. The seating capacity of St. Augustine's is 1,200, and it was taxed to its utmost to accommodate the gathering, which was such as is rarely seen inside of a church. One could tell by the hard, worn faces what manner of men and women the larger number of them were, yet down many of their faces tears of pity stole silently as the solemn and beautiful Protestant Episcopal service proceeded. In front of the chancel lay nine coffins, draped in black. The caskets were handsome ones, with silver trimmings. On each the name-plate bore, instead of the unknown name, the inscription: "St. John's Gospel. Chap. 14th, 1st to 3d verses." Upon each coffin lay a wreath of beautiful flowers, offerings from Mrs. Sarah J. Bird, "Mother" of the lost boys of the Bowery," and the ladies who are her assistants in the Gospel Settlement at No. 91 Clinton Street. No act of kindness was lacking that even a mother's hand could have rendered. Through the stained glass windows, back of the chancel, the light, though outside skies were gray, fell in, warm and gracious, and fell like a benediction on caskets and flowers. Several pews near the front were filled by managers and attaches of the Bowery Mission, the editorial and business staff of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and by representatives from many Missions in New York, Brooklyn, Staten Island and Jersey City.

The nine poor fellows in the coffins were nameless, unclaimed dead. Ten days the Coroner had waited, and the funeral had been deferred, in order that some distant friends might come forward and say in loving words, "This poor clay is mine." Two of the eleven who perished had been identified, and the family of one had claimed the sad privilege of interment; that of the other being too poor. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD had intervened and met all expenses. The nine remaining were "no man's kindred." Perhaps they had died to love and life long before that sad Sabbath morning of March 13, when, who knows but that "purified as by fire," their souls went up to God. It is the friendless, the nameless, the unclaimed, the broken-hearted that the Bowery Mission shelters. And its nameless, unclaimed dead were not unmourned. They were the dead of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. They had no kinsman to send word, "I am sorry," but from distant Cuba their faithful friend, Dr. Klopsch, struggling to save starving multitudes, cabled: "The terrible disaster at the Bowery Mission makes my heart bleed. I would return immediately, but with thousands dying around me, my duty is here." And all that outward reverence and inward grief could do to honor those nameless men was done, and heartfelt tears were shed. In the place of the mourners—where no kindred sat—the "Mother of the Bowery boys" wept as for her own; gentle young women and consecrated mission workers, shed the dew of their pure tears upon these men who, sometime, must have been a mother's, a wife's, a sister's or a daughter's beloved one, but whom now none remembered, none claimed. In the officers of the Mission, and John H. Wyburn, its superintendent, there was the sorrow of brothers, of men for men, whose souls as well as bodies they had sought to save, the love of the laborer for that for which he hath labored.

"Oh, God of Bethel, by whose hand
Thy people still are fed;
Who through this weary pilgrimage
Hast all our fathers led.

"Oh, spread thy sheltering wings around,
Till all our wanderings cease,
And at our Father's loved abode,
Our souls arrive in peace!"

So sang the white-robed choir, as they filed into the church and took their places in the chancel. And then as the Vicar and his assistants came up the aisle, clear and distinct rose the beautiful words: "I am the Resurrection and the Life, saith the Lord." And again the choir was heard chanting: "Lord, let me know mine end and the number of my days." Rev. William Du Hamel read the lesson, that most beautiful of beautiful chapters, 1. Cor. 15: "Now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept." After which, as with one voice the people sung, "Nearer My God to Thee." From the pulpit Rev. Dr. Kimber made a brief and impressive discourse, he called attention to the uncertainty of life, and to the swiftness and suddenness with which the death-message often comes. "What happened to these men," he said, "might happen to any one of us. An hour or two after retiring to their rest, death met them suddenly, as death may meet us any night. We trust they rest in hope. The mercy of God is beyond measure. But would each and all of us who are here to-day be ready to meet death at a moment's notice. We surely should seek to stand prepared, to be always ready to face our God—always ready for swift and sudden journey to that better land which is our true home. Nothing should interfere with this preparation. Temptations should not. Trials should not. Temptations and trials are but opportunities to prove what manner of men we are; they are but sent to force our footsteps into the narrow path which leads to our Father's house where the many mansions are." When the preacher's words were ended, choir and people sang the Gospel hymns, "I Need Thee every Hour," and "Jesus, Lover of my Soul." Then followed the solemn prayer of committal, the minister saying: "Forasmuch as it hath pleased Almighty God in his wise providence to take out of this world the soul of our deceased brother, we therefore commit his body to the ground," while the slow, sad music of the organ wailing through the church changed presently as a sweet female voice sang softly Handel's "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Together, people and pastors said the Lord's prayer, and "O Lord Jesus Christ, who by thy death didst take away the sting of death; grant unto us, thy servants, so to follow in faith where thou hast led the way, that we may at length fall asleep peacefully in thee and awake up after thy likeness."

THE FUNERAL SERVICES IN ST. AUGUSTINE'S CHAPEL.

The choir singing the recessional hymn, "Brief Life is here our Portion," marched down the centre aisle and pausing at the inner church door formed into line on each side, and through this singing, white-robed line, the nine coffins were borne to the hearses, and thence, accompanied by the clergy and members of the congregation, to their peaceful rest at Mount Olivet Cemetery.

St. Augustine's is a church for the people, for such as the Bowery Mission shelters: and the spirit which prompted Dr. Kimber to arrange the beautiful song-service and his church to bear expenses of the large choir, singers and soloist, is that spirit of fraternal sympathy which makes Christianity a light that cannot be hid. Rev. Stephen Merritt and Frank E. Campbell, of the Stephen Merritt Burial Co., had charge of the funeral.

THE FIELD OF BLOOD.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Acts 1: 19, ... } Aceldama, that is to say, the field of blood.

THE money that Judas gave for surrendering Christ was used to purchase a graveyard. As the money was blood-money, the ground bought by it was called in the Syriac tongue, "Aceldama," meaning "The field of blood." Well, there is one word I want to write to-day over every race-course where wagers are staked, and every pool-room, and every gambling saloon, and every table, public or private, where men and women bet for sums of money, large or small, and that is a word incarnadined with the life of innumerable victims—Aceldama.

The gambling spirit, which is at all times a stupendous evil, ever and anon sweeps over the country like an epidemic, prostrating uncounted thousands. There has never been a worse attack than that from which all the villages, towns, and cities are now suffering.

While among my hearers and readers are those who have passed on into the afternoon of life, and the shadows are lengthening, and the sky crimsons with the glow of the setting sun, a large number of them are in early life, and the morning is coming down out of the clear sky upon them, and the bright air is redolent with spring blossoms, and the stream of life, gleaming and glancing, rushes on between flowery banks, making music as it goes. Some of you are engaged in mercantile concerns, as clerks and book-keepers, and your whole life is to be passed in the exciting world of traffic. The sound of busy life stirs you as the drum stirs the fiery war-horse. Others are in the mechanical arts, to hammer and chisel your way through life, and success awaits you. Some are preparing for professional life, and grand opportunities are before you; nay, some of you already have buckled on the armor. But, whatever your age and calling, the subject of gambling about which I speak to-day is pertinent.

Some years ago, when an association for the suppression of gambling was organized, an agent of the association came to a prominent citizen and asked him to patronize the society. He said: "No, I can have no interest in such an organization. I am in no wise affected by the evil." At that very time his son, who was his partner in business, was one of the heaviest players in a famous gambling establishment. Another refused his patronage on the same ground, not knowing that his first book keeper, though receiving a salary of only four thousand dollars, was losing from fifty to one hundred dollars a night. The president of a railroad company refused to patronize the institution, saying: "That society is good for the defense of merchants, but we railroad people are not injured by this evil," not knowing that, at that very time, two of his conductors were spending three nights of each week at faro tables in New York. This evil strikes at the whole world.

Gambling is the risking of something more or less valuable in the hope of winning more than you hazard. The instruments of gaming may differ, but the principle is the same. The betting and dealing cards, however full of temptation, is not gambling unless stakes are put up, while on the other hand, gambling may be carried on without cards, or dice, or billiards, or a ten-pin alley. The man who bets on horses, or elections, or battles, the man who deals in "fancy" stocks, or conducts a business which hazards extra capital, or goes into transactions without foundation but dependent upon what men call "luck" is a gambler.

Whatever you expect to get from your neighbor without offering an equivalent in money, or time, or skill, is either the product of theft or gaming. Lottery tickets and lottery policies come into the same category. Bazaars for the founding of hospitals, schools, and churches, conducted on the raffling system, come under the same denomination. Do not, therefore, associate gambling necessarily with any instrument, or game, or time, or place, or think the principle depends upon whether you play for a glass of wine or one hundred shares of railroad stock. Whether you patronize "auction pools," "French mutuals," or "book-making," whether you employ faro or billiards, rondo and keno, cards or bagatelle, the very idea of the thing is dishonest; for it professes to bestow upon you a good for which you give no equivalent.

This crime is no newborn sprite, but a haggard transgression that comes staggering down under a mantle of curses through many centuries. All nations of the earth, both barbarous and civilized, have been addicted to it.

But now the laws of the whole civilized world denounce the system. Enactments have been passed, but only partially enforced, and at times not enforced at all. The men interested in gaming houses, and in jockey clubs, wield such influence by their numbers and affluence, that the judge, the jury, and the police officer must be bold indeed who would array themselves against these infamous establishments. The House of Commons of England actually adjourns on Derby Day that members may attend the races; and in the best circles of society in this country to-day are many hundreds of professedly respectable men who are acknowledged gamblers.

Men wishing to gamble will find places just suited to their capacity, not only in the underground oyster-cellar, or at the table back of the curtain, covered with greasy cards, or in the steamboat smoking cabin, where the bloated wretch with rings in his ears deals out his pack, and winks in the unsuspecting traveler—providing free drinks all around—but in gilded parlors and amid gorgeous surroundings. This sin works ruin, first, by providing an unhealthful stimulant. Excitement is pleasurable. Under every sky and in every age men have sought it. We must at times have excitement. A thousand voices in our nature demand it. It is right. It is healthful. It is inspiriting. It is a desire God-given. But anything that first gratifies this appetite and hurls it back in a terrific reaction, is deplorable and wicked. Look out for the agitation that, like a rough musician, in bringing out the tune plays so hard he breaks down the instrument! God never made a man strong enough to endure the wear and tear of gambling excitements.

A young man having suddenly inherited a large property, sits at the hazard tables, and takes up in a dice-box the estate won by a father's lifetime's sweat, and shakes it and tosses it away. Intemperance soon stigmatizes its victim, kicking him out, a slavering fool, into the ditch, or sending him, with the drunkard's hiccough, staggering up the street where his family lives. But gambling does not in that way expose its victims. The gambler may be eaten up by the gambler's passion, yet you only discover it by the greed in his eyes, the hardness of his features, the nervous restlessness, the threadbare coat, and his embarrassed business. Yet he is on the road to ruin, and no preacher's voice, or startling warning, or wife's entreaty, can make him stay for a moment his headlong career.

The infernal spell is on him; a giant is aroused within; and though you bind him with cables, they would part like thread, and though you fasten him seven times around with chains, they would snap like rusted wire; and though you piled up in his path heaven-high Bibles, tracts, and sermons, and on the top should set the cross of the Son of God, over them all the gambler would leap like a roe over the rocks, on his way to perdition. "Aceldama, the field of blood!"

Again, this sin works ruin by killing industry. A man used to reaping scores or hundreds of dollars from the gaming-table will not be content with slow work. He will say, "What is the use of trying to make these fifty dollars in my store, when I can make five times that in half an hour by the dice." You never knew a confirmed gambler who was industrious. The men given to this vice spend their time, not actively employed in the game, in idleness, or intoxication, or sleep, or in corrupting new victims.

Any trade or occupation that is of use is ennobling. The street sweeper advances the interests of society by the cleanliness effected. The cat pays for the fragments it eats by clearing the house of vermin. The fly that takes the sweetness from the dregs of the cup compensates by purifying the air and keeping back the pestilence. But the gambler gives not anything for that which he takes. I recall that sentence. He does make a return; but it is disgrace to the man that he fleeces, despair to his heart, ruin to his business, anguish to his wife, shame to his children, and eternal wasting away to his soul. He pays in tears and blood and agony and darkness and woe.

Furthermore, this sin is the source of dishonesty. The game of hazard itself is often a cheat. How many tricks and deceptions in the dealing of the cards! The opponent's hand is oftimes found out by fraud. Cards are marked so that th may be designated from the back. I pert gamesters have their accomplic and one wink may decide the game. T dice have been found loaded with plat so that doublets come up every ti These dice are introduced by the gar lers unobserved by the honest men w have come into the play, and this accou for the fact that ninety-nine out of a h dred who gamble, however wealthy wh they began, at the end are found to be pc miserable, haggard wretches, that wo not now be allowed to sit on the doors of the house that they once owned.

In a gaming-house in San Francisc young man having just come from mines deposited a large sum upon the and won twenty-two thousand dollars. the tide turns. Intense anxiety comes on the countenances of all. Slowly cards went forth. Every eye is fix not a sound is heard until the ace is vealed favorable to the bank. There shouts of "Foul! Foul!" but the keep at the tables produce their pistols, and uproar is silenced, and the bank has w ninety-five thousand dollars. Do you this a game of chance? There is chance about it.

Notice also the effect of this cr upon domestic happiness. It has sent ruthless ploughshare through hundred families, until the wife sat in rags, the daughters were disgraced, and sons grew up to the same infamous p tices, or took a short cut to destruct across the murderer's scaffold. He has lost all charms for the gambler. I tame are the children's caresses an wife's devotion to the gambler! H drearily the fire burns on the dome hearth! There must be louder laugh and something to win, and something lose; an excitement to drive the he faster, fillip the blood and fire the imag tion. No home, however bright, can k back the gamester. The sweet call f love bounds back from his iron soul. all endearments are consumed in the of his passion.

When things go wrong at a gam table they shout: "Foul! foul!" C all the gaming-tables of the world l out: "Foul! foul! Infinitely foul!"

Forthwith, the conductors of the enterprise conclude they will raffle for some of the valu articles, and, under pretense of anxiet make their minister a present or ple some popular member of the church, cinating persons are dispatched thro the room, pencil in hand, to "so shares," or perhaps each draws for own advantage, and scores of people home with their trophies, thinking tha is all right, for Christian ladies did embroidery and Christian men did raffling, and the proceeds went towar new communion set. But you may dep on it, that as far as morality is concern you might as well have won by the cr of the billiard hall or the turn of the d box. Do you wonder that churches bu lighted, or upholstered by such processe that come to great financial and spiri decrepitude? The devil says: "I hel to build that house of worship, and I h as much right there as you have;" for once the devil is right. We do read that they had a lottery for build the church at Corinth, or at Antioch for getting up an embroidered surp for St. Paul. All this I style ecclesia cal gambling. More than one man wh destroyed can say that his first step on wrong road was when he won someth at a church fair.

The gambling spirit has not stop for any indecency. There transpired Maryland a lottery in which people dr for lots in a burying-ground! The mod

ONLY Love like Christ's can persist in unselfish service. Persist, keep on, press forward. Forget injuries. Forgive neglect. Stand at the door and knock. Keep the door ajar for the prodigal. Set a candle in the window at midnight for the wanderer. Only Love can do these miracles. The mother can watch longer than the doctor; the shepherd will endure longer than the hireling. Pity will spare when the law will destroy. What is it that is troubled on every side, yet not distressed; perplexed but not despairing; persecuted but not forsaken; cast down but not destroyed—What is it? It is faith that works by Love.

THE MESSAGE OF EASTER.

hat of betting about everything is pro ctive of immense mischief. The mo healthful and innocent amusements of chting and base-ball playing have bec the occasion of putting up excited and extravagant wagers. That which to any has been advantageous to body and mind, has been to others the means of ancial and moral loss. The custon is pernicious in the extreme, where scos of men in respectable life give themselves up to betting, now on this boa now on that; now on this ball club, ow on that. Betting that once was chi y the accompaniment of the race-cou e. is fast becoming a national habit, and in some circles any opinion advanced on ance or politics is accosted with the interogation: "How much will you bet on it, sir?"

his custom may make no appeal to slo lethargic temperaments, but there are in the country tens of thousands of qui , nervous, sanguine, excitable temperaments, ready to be acted upon, and the feet will soon take hold on death. For some months, and perhaps for years, one will linger in the more polite and fashionable elegant circle of gamesters, but, after awhile their pathway will come to the fatal plunge.

Shall I sketch the history of the gambler Lured by bad company, he finds his way into a place where honest men ought never to go. He sits down to his first game, but only for pastime and the desire of being thought sociable. The partners deal out the cards. They unconsciously play into Satan's hands, who takes all the tricks and both the players' souls for trumps— he being a sharper at any game. A slight stake is put up, just to add interest to the play. Game after game is played. Larger stakes and still larger. They begin to move nervously on the chairs. Their brows lower, and eyes flash until now they who win and they who lose, fired alike with passion, sit with set lips, and compressed lips, and clenched fists, and eyes like fireballs that seem starting from their sockets, to see the final turn before it comes; if losing, pale with envy and tremulous with unuttered oaths cast back red-hot upon the heart— or winning—with hysteric laugh—"Ha, ha! have it!"

A few years have passed, and he is only the wreck of a man. Seating himself at the game, ere he throws the first card, he kisses the last relic of his wife—the marriage-ring which sealed the solemn vows between them. The game is lost, and staggering back in exhaustion he dreams. The bright hours of the past mock his agony, and in his dreams, fiends with eyes of fire and tongues of flame circle about him with joined hands, to dance and sing their orgies with hellish chorus, chanting, "Fill, brother!" kissing his clammy forehead until their loathsome locks, flowing with serpents, crawl into his bosom, and sink their sharp fangs and suck up his life blood, and coiling around his heart pinch it with chills and shudders unutterable.

Take warning! You are no stronger than tens of thousands who have by this practice been overthrown. No young man in our cities can escape being tempted. Beware of the first beginnings! This road is down grade, and every instant increases the momentum. Launch not upon the treacherous sea. Splint hulks strew the beach. Everlasting storms howl up and down, tossing unwary craft into the Hell Gate. I speak of what I have seen with my own eyes. To a gambler's death-bed there comes no hope. He will probably die alone. His former associates come not nigh his dwelling. When the hour comes, his miserable soul will go out of a miserable life into a miserable eternity.

As his poor remains pass the house where he was ruined, old companions may look out for a moment and says "There goes the old carcass—dead at last;" but they will not get up from the table. Let him down now into his grave. Plant no tree to cast its shade there, for the long, deep, eternal gloom that settles there is shadow enough. Plant no "forget-me-nots" or eglantines around the spot, for flowers were not made to grow on such a blasted heath. Visit it not in the sunshine, for that would be mockery, but in the dismal night, when no stars are out, and the spirits of darkness come down, and ride on the wind, then visit the grave of the gambler.

EASTER WEEK IN ROME.

A Season of Social and Spiritual Activities—Catholics Embracing Protestantism and Uniting with the Waldensian Church.

WE reached Rome before Holy Week in ample time for the celebrations. An acquaintance met us at the railway station and escorted us to our hotel, explaining as the cab wheels rumbled over the Belgian pavement: "This pension is said to be the best in all Rome, though that may not be saying much, for Rome is not notable for good pensions. It has, however, a fine location, is owned by the Pope, has a lift, and an obliging concierge. My friend, the directeur, will provide every comfort. He will not expect you to observe the fasts, for he understands that you are Protestants."

THE PONTE ROLTO, A FAMOUS ROMAN BRIDGE.

We found Signor P.—— accommodating. The other pensionnaires were Italians and French, with a sprinkling of Germans and Irish, several English people, two Russians, and a few Egyptians. Wednesday before Easter we went to St. Peter's to hear the Tenebrae and the Miserere, taking extra wraps, also a newspaper which we put under our feet to lessen the chill from the marble floor. The Pension Directeur gave us camp-chairs as he saw us depart, saying, "Keep these until after Easter, you will need them in the churches," and swinging them from our arm, we carried them easily, and were glad of their comfort, for few seats are provided in the great cathedrals. St. Peter's is the Pope's church, and the choir unexcelled. Many members of this choir are heavily bearded men, others, bald-headed. One especially sweet-voiced soprano, is called "the Pope's angel." The audience was very large. But St. Peter's is so vast, that even an immense audience will not half fill the building. The service was full of surprises. Groups of priests would chat familiarly, even jollily, within a few steps of the worshippers. They seemed as unconcerned as if in their own dwelling.

At the conclusion of the Tenebrae, one of the Cardinals exhibited the "sacred relics" from a loggia, far up above the high altar, under which St. Peter is said to be buried. All the people, excepting a few others like ourselves, devoutly knelt. The effect was theatrically perfect. All lights were extinguished, except the tiny myriad lamps about St. Peter's tomb, and four great candles, high up in the loggia, revealing the brilliance of the Cathedral. Below in the gloom the people knelt, and with rapt faces far down the shadowy aisles, they crossed themselves. Exquisite chimes rang out, as each relic was held in view. The relics were each set in jewelled frames, and seemed ablaze with light and color. The most absurd claims are made with regard to these so-called relics.

On Good Friday, the churches are plunged in darkness, and the Pope decrees that the faithful must now ascend the Scala Santa, (sacred stairs). The steps are thronged with all sorts and conditions of people. These are the stairs.—so they say in Rome.—that our Saviour once trod. Certain it is that these are the very steps which Luther commenced to ascend, and upon which he renounced his old faith, stood upright, and walked down, the great reformer.

The steps of marble, covered with wood for protection, were brought from Jerusalem, it is said, in the year 326, by the Empress Helena. "Indulgences" are granted at the base.

The day before Easter is spent largely in preparations for the morrow. All the Easter meats, wines, cakes, indeed, everything that is to be eaten on Easter Sabbath, must be in readiness. The cakes are iced in pink and white, with a lamb in the centre, and are usually put upon the table in the hall for a blessing. This is an old-time custom freely indulged in in Rome.

Easter Sunday was gay with music and flowers. Early in the morning our directeur brought us a vase full of delicious white blossoms, wishing us Happy Easter. The table was exquisitely decorated for every meal. For example, colored eggs were served at breakfast on an oval platter, the platter entirely covered with heliotrope. People who had observed severest fasting indulged in freest feasting. There was a great variety of table delicacies, rich meats, and many wines. The Pope had administered early mass in the Sistine Chapel, a mass very difficult to attend. The entire day was afterwards given by Romanists to vesper service in St. Peter's or other churches, also to amusement, and evening parties.

The most impressive sight of all to us, was witnessing nineteen Catholics uniting with the Waldensian Church in Rome, on Easter day. We had attended the communion service in the Waldensian Church, and, at the close of the sermon, the Rev. Dr. Prochet called the names of nineteen people, mostly men. They stood in line before the pulpit, and then and there renounced their old faith, and took the most sacred, solemn vows of Protestantism. Later, Dr. Prochet gave to each the bread and wine, with the words: "This do in remembrance of me." And as we partook of the sacrament, side by side, with these earnest, thoughtful, staunch, true-hearted Protestants, we felt at home and that we had been with Jesus. EMMA J. GRAY.

THE BASILICA OF ST. PETER'S CATHEDRAL.

How a Famous Hymn Was Written.

"Write something for us to sing at the service to-morrow morning."

Dr. Shepley, vicar of Wrexham, said this to his son-in-law, Reginald Heber in 1819. Dr. Shepley was to preach next day in behalf of foreign missions and he was chatting over the subject of his discourse with a few friends. Heber, already known as writer of impromptu verse, withdrew to another part of the room and soon returned with the three first stanzas of "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," just as we sing them now, except that in the seventh line of the second verse, he wrote "savage," which he afterward changed to "heathen." Dr. Shepley was satisfied, but Heber was not until he added the triumphant fourth stanza, beginning, "Waft, waft, ye winds his story." In 1823 Heber went as a missionary to India, where he died after three years of patient and loving service.

A Great Gathering in the Black Belt.

Seventh Annual Tuskegee Farmers' Conference—Interesting Resolutions—Booker T. Washington's Reward.

THE Tuskegee Farmers' Conference, of which institution our readers have had recent account, has lately concluded its seventh annual session. Over 2,000 negroes and many white people were in attendance. Besides the large Alabama contingent, delegations from Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Mississippi, and Texas indicate the rapid spread of the conference idea throughout the South, and justify the noble hope and labor of Professor Booker T. Washington, its promoter. Professor Washington's opening address of earnest and practical advice bore fruit in the final resolutions and recommendations of the Conference, which emphasized the present value, and further need of such outside influences as had been effectual in stimulating educational movements in the race. Since eighty-five per cent. of the Gulf State negroes live by agriculture, agricultural training was insisted upon. Purchase of land, if only in small tracts, while land is cheap, and occupation of Government lands was recommended; and men were urged to replace, as fast as possible, the one room cabin with decent houses. Educated young men and women were reminded of their obligation to share their benefits with less fortunate fellows. Thriftlessness and extravagance, and the system of mortgaging crops were deplored, and negroes were urged to raise their own food supplies. The formation of local farmers' conferences throughout the South was recommended. Speeches and reports, encouraging and doleful, were colored by that ready wit and humor for which the negro character is well known.

A Unique Reproof.

Perhaps our readers may be interested in the following account of the novel way in which a minister called his flock's attention to their neglect of church duties:

When the people came into the Central Christian Church, of which many of the wealthiest citizens of St. Louis are members, Sunday evening, March 20, they saw that the pulpit was draped in mourning. There were many speculations as to the cause, but it was not known until the pastor, the Rev. Frank G. Tyrrell, arose and stated at the beginning of the services that the mourning was for the vacant pews during the week of the revival meetings. He added that these absentees had promised him their support, but had not attended a meeting; therefore he thought it proper to drape his pulpit in mourning, and he added that if the attendance was not better, the entire church would be draped. As a result of this unique move the church was soon crowded, and every one of the hitherto vacant pews occupied.

The Sunday School

THE TRANSFIGURATION.

Sunday School Lesson for April 17. Matt. 17: 1-9. Golden Text, John 1: 14.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

NEARLY two-thirds of the time of Christ's ministry on earth was already gone, and things were rapidly occurring to bring about the final crisis. The confession of Peter, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God" (Matt. 16: 16), had prepared the way for his announcing the truth unwelcome to his disciples, of his coming humiliation, his cross, and passion. Peter, especially, had taken upon himself to rebuke his Lord, and attempt to set him right; only drawing forth the further statement that whosoever would follow him must also deny himself, take up his cross, and follow him.

How incomprehensible to disciples who had only a one-sided view of the Scriptures! And yet, at the same time, he spoke of glory: "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels, and then shall he reward every man according to his works. Verily, I say unto you, there be some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom" (Matt. 16: 16-28).

The words fell on unopened ears and on closed hearts. Were they then in vain? Never. They were spoken to be brought to their remembrance by the Holy Spirit when the time should come (John 14: 26; 16: 4). Now, in our own day, many things are said which those who are not ready for him will understand when "they that wait for him," shall have been taken away, and they themselves shall be left (Matt. 24: 40). This shall precede his coming again in his glory, for that cannot be until all his true saints left on earth shall have been also taken away, for he will bring them again with him when he comes. In his tenderness and compassion, the Lord did not reprove them, but gave them for the eye as well as for the ear, what the Holy Spirit should, later on, explain to them.

Six days later, says the evangelist, "Jesus taketh Peter, James and John, his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them, and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light." Did the disciples connect this vision of glory with his words about the Son of man coming in his kingdom? Did they understand that his kingdom was "not of this world?" (John 18: 36). Why then was it that even after the resurrection of Christ, after he had "opened their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures," they could ask him, "Wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts 1: 6). They had not yet learned to be citizens of heaven (Phil. 3: 20), they were not yet pilgrims and strangers on the earth, they could not yet sit with Christ in heavenly places because they were not yet filled with the Spirit.

But Christ, the Word made flesh, whose flesh was yielded to the Eternal Word, was interested in a kingdom of light and glory and life; men over whom death had no power were there with him. "There talked with him two men who were Moses and Elias, who appeared in glory and spoke of his decease, which he should accomplish at Jerusalem" (Luke 9: 30). Heavenly beings, which had been men on earth, and who understood what the disciples did not understand; the coming humiliation, death and resurrection of our Lord; glorified human beings conformed to his likeness, understanding and entering into his purposes, such is the kingdom of the Son of man, which the disciples did not and could not understand. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him" (1. Cor. 2: 9).

This was one flash of glory let into the life of the three disciples, but they were out of their element in it; it was something incomprehensible, to which as yet they did not belong. While, by the heavenly ones, words were being spoken, on which the destiny of myriads of human beings should hang, the earthly ones "were heavy with sleep," (Luke 9: 32, R.V.), and it was only when they were fully awake that "they saw his glory and the two men that stood with him." And Peter, ever ready to speak, whether appropriately or not, answered and said to Jesus: "Rabbi, it is good for us to be here, and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, one for Moses, and one for Elijah. For he wist not what to answer, for they became sore afraid." (Matt. 17: 4-6). How much better to say nothing when we do not know what to say! How mighty in power was the silence of the Lord Jesus when he answered not a word!

"It is good for us to be here," was the utterance of Peter. How little had he learned the lesson of the Lord's Prayer to make his own interests subservient to those of God! How little he yet knew how to seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and then all the other things needful should be added unto him! When a man knows not what to say and is off his guard, the real man, his true self comes out. Peter's self was a very pronounced one. But it was at this very juncture that the heavenly beings for whom Peter would have made tabernacles, that he might enjoy their presence longer, were shut out from his sight. "There came a cloud overshadowing them; and there came a voice out of the cloud, saying: 'This is my beloved Son; hear ye him.'" Henceforth he is the authorized messenger.

MOUNT HERMON, THE TRADITIONAL SCENE OF THE TRANSFIGURATION.

But how unheavenly were the disciples after this! Neither the holy teaching of the Saviour, nor the holy vision on the mountain, had the power to transform them. It was only when their understanding had been opened to understand the Scriptures, and the Holy Spirit had come in to dwell within them that earth lost its hold upon them, and they became true children of the kingdom, true citizens of heaven. Through the Word and the Spirit, to which their Lord had yielded his human nature all through his life, they were finally conformed to him, and were a living proof that, "as he is, so are we in this world" (1. John 4: 17).

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

MANY attempts have been made to explain away the supernatural character of the Transfiguration, but they involve greater difficulties than does the plain narrative. Some have thought it a vision, but that would involve our believing that three men had simultaneously the same vision, which is incredible. It seems clear that Christ, climbing the mount in the evening, as he was in the habit of doing, to spend the night in communion with his Father, took with him, for once, the three disciples who, of all his followers, had come nearest to him in heart. We are inclined to think that the glory which they saw radiating from his person in the darkness was no unusual thing. As the face of Moses was radiant after talking with God, probably Christ's person glittered every night during those interviews; but in this instance there were witnesses. Jesus foreseeing the smiting, the scourging, and the spitting which he would endure, may have been minded to give these men, who had already recognized God in him, confirmation of their belief, which would be a support to them in their coming trials. Perhaps the spirits of great and good men, long dead, often came and talked with him in those long vigils. We do not know. But on this night, two were seen, representative respectively of the law and the prophets. In all history there were no two whose endorsement of Christ would weigh so much with a Jew, as Moses and Elijah, and we can imagine how, in all the troubles that came upon the disciples afterwards, the fact of their having seen these two in friendly intercourse with Christ, would strengthen their faith. Peter mentioned this result (See II. Pet. 1: 16-18).

Moses and Elias talking with him. When people tell us that the soul sleeps in the grave, between death and the resurrection, and that there is no conscious existe immediately after death, they have s difficulty in accounting for the prese at least, of Moses on the mount. Th is no question as to his death, tho there is mystery; yet it would appear he was so near to Christ that he c talk with him and in that supernat light his presence was revealed. How disciples recognized him and Elijah, not appear, but there was evidently doubt as to his identity. It may be the spirits of the departed are alv nearer to us than we suppose. If so, sorry some of them must be when see those they love living for the worl stead of for Chist. We may never them in this life, but we have the timony of their lives. Hugh Miller te a faithful Christian minister whose for his people was intense. He reque that after his death a stone should b up at the entrance of the church in w he had preached, where every one entered could see it, and on the ston inscription solemnly warning every son against sin. He wished that ston be a witness for him when his tongue silent in death. Hugh Miller sa seemed to him as if the old man really there continuing his work.

It is good for us to be here. That true; but it was not good for the demo at the foot of the mount that they sh stay. Many good people reluctant to leave the ch or the prayer-meeting w they are supremely happy sometimes they would be b occupied in trying to others. It is good to be o mount with Christ if the itual strength that is ga there is used in service ward. Longfellow's "Le Beautiful" expresses this bly. The monk who longed so ardently for a of his Lord was at las warded with the beatificvi n. As he knelt in adoratio heard the bell calling hi to the duty of distributing He hesitated about leavin vision, but the voice of prevailed and he went to form it. When he retu the vision was still there it said to him: "Hadst stayed I must have fled."

Three Tabernacles. The vised Version says that P offered to make three t nacles. The word does n give a clear idea of his m ing. It was not a tabern or place of worship, dedic to each, but merely a ten ary shelter. As Christ pat ically said when he was he had not where to lay head. If he were here now many would gladly offer h a shelter. He does not ne it now, but he counts any ness done for his sake as for him. Tolstoi tells the of a poor shoe-mender sheltered and fed a poor miserable in Christ's name, and as he fell aslee saw the child's face changed to the of Christ and his rags to the lumi robe, and the child said to him, "I much as ye have done it to one of least of these, ye have done it unto m

They saw no man save Jesus only. Moses the giver of the law and Elijah greatest of the prophets vanished, Christ remained. He still remains as revelation of God to man. It is rel of a clergyman who was fond of preac about the symbolism of the Tabern and the meaning of the strange ima of Daniel and the Revelation, that w he came to die, his mind was still rum on the Old Testament. But a friend c to see him and finding him conscious unable to talk, sat down by him and the fourteenth chapter of John and knelt by his bed and prayed that Ch would be with his servant in his dy hour. The dying man's lips moved the nurse bending over him heard whisper: "He is drawing near." The of worry and distress on his face chan to one of rapt contemplation and fin to one of joy. As his friend rose f his knees and looked at him, he saw he was dead and he had died in calm fidence with a smile on his lips.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

THE CHILDREN'S OFFERINGS.

(To the Lee Orphanage, Havana.)

We send you our pennies, the children said,
To buy the Cuban children bread.
And, we send them garments to wear,
And with each garment we send a prayer.
That the children's God who rules above,
Will clothe their land with his gracious love.
We hear that they send us their blessing sweet,
Because we give them bread to eat.
Oh, you send again, the children said,
That them the Lord has blessed the bread,
And that Jesus, who loves little children so,
The Cuban children will save, we know.

How Women Work in Japan.

Labors of the Great Heimin or Peasant Class—The Rice-Field Workers.

THERE are three distinct classes of society in Japan, the nobles or daimios, the samurai or military, and the great heimin or peasant class, which includes artisans, merchants, and agriculturists. Much has been written about Japanese customs. Everything connected with this land of marvelous development is interesting to dwellers of the Occident, and Americans are fairly familiar with Japanese life, where the improvements are found side by side with the quaint methods of primitive days, and American rush and hurry displays the gravity of Eastern decorum. The peasant life of the interior, however, is less widely known than that of the more fortunate classes, dwelling in, or near, the cities. As rural districts are penetrated, one finds the proverbially picturesque and attractive homes of the Japanese becoming poorer. The rice farmers, though industrious and thrifty, are not prosperous. Heavy taxes and frequent floods stare them in the face continually. Nevertheless they are very cheerful. A rice-field hand, from hard toil with crude implements, barely earns the little that is necessary for his family's support. The rice farmer's family helps to make the crop, and often sees in the rice-fields, the woman side by side with the man, wearing blue-cotton trousers, her skirt tucked up out of the mud in which she stands nearly knee-deep, and indistinguishable from her husband, as far as dress goes, chiefly by the broader belt tied in a bow behind. They have various primitive ways of threshing or hulling rice, all of them being on the mortar and pestle order. Every farm-house has its hulling apparatus, and a common road-side scene is that of peasants threshing their rice. In the illustration the pestle—a reed with a round wooden knob at the bottom—hangs from a horizontal bamboo cane by leathern attachments: as the man and woman who grasp it turn it back and forth, so that the rice in the trough under the barrel is threshed thereby. When one pair of hands weary, another pair is ready to take their place. The rice, as it comes from the trough, will be sifted free of chaff and then it will be ground or pounded into flour by instruments as primitive as the threshing-machine.

It is surprising to notice what a large proportion of the work is done in the farming class by women. In mountainous districts they climb the mountains and carry down bearing loads of wood that would do credit to donkeys. They are field-laborers, grooms, porters, hotel attendants, and sometimes hotel proprietors. At Nikko, you find them in charge of the pack-horses. It is a common experience, when mountain-climbing, to find that, while men are leading the animals you ride, pretty peasant girls of twelve or fourteen in gay, blue trousers, red sashes, and blue handkerchiefs, lead the pack-ponies. The mountaineers are often remarkably well developed. The fine health and goodly stature of the Yase women has often caused their selection as foster-mothers to Imperial infants.

HOW RICE IS THRESHED IN JAPAN BY FARMERS AND THEIR WIVES.

What the Glow-Worm Did.

Sometimes, says a writer in the Orphanage Record, children think they are too small to do any good; they must wait until they are grown, or at least until they are as big as the older brother or sister. Did you ever see a glow-worm? It is a little worm, about half an inch long, which shines with a light, as fire-flies do. I read the other day about the good one of these little glow-worms did. There had been a battle, and the men were fleeing from the enemy. They lost their way. They had with them a little instrument called a compass, which would have shown them the way, only it was so dark they could not see how the needle pointed. They carried no light, for fear the enemy would see and follow them. One of the men noticed a little glow-worm shining in the grass. He picked it up and put it on the compass, and there was just light enough to show which way their home was. They were very glad, and went on until they got home. Don't you think these men thought a little glow-worm could do good? And cannot a little child do as much as a glow-worm? Bright, sunny smiles, pleasant words and helpful deeds are a child's way of shining, and they make all the household happy.

Reading the Bible in a Moslem Home.

Miss Gardiner, a missionary in Calcutta gives the following interesting glimpse of Indian home-life. One morning, she says, I found myself in the house of a Mohammedan family. I have known some members of this family for a long time, but have never visited them before. One or two of the little girls used to be in one of our schools, so I thought I had better see what had become of them. I found the whole family busily engaged in wedding preparations, for the two little girls were affianced to two brothers. The girls are twelve or younger, the boys are sixteen or seventeen. It all seems like a play; only, alas! when the fun and play is over, the real part sets in and it is often very sadly real. This morning they were very good, for, laying aside their work, they all gathered around to hear what would be read to them. The mother, a bright-faced young woman, seemed especially interested, and the grandmother drew near to listen. Little children and old white-haired women grouped together on the floor to hear the Word of God. It was a pleasant sight; we talked of Christ and his wonderful love, and one at least among the number prayed earnestly that the Holy Spirit would do the work for her, feeling her own helplessness. It is indeed his work, and it is only as he works through the Holy Spirit that these hearts can be touched.

THIS LITTLE BOY GAVE HIS BANK TO CUBA.

A Curious Plant.

A "Snake Lily," in the possession of Captain S. R. Vaughan, of Philadelphia, has been attracting attention. The bulb, which came as a gift from Cochin, China, looks like an Indian turnip. It lies in the cellar all winter; in Spring is brought out and set in a basket without any earth or water around it, but puts forth a mottled green stalk at the rate of nine inches every twenty-four hours until it is over eight feet tall, bears a large maroon-colored lily; then, stalk and flower wither; the bulb is set in earth; in midsummer it sends up a great umbrella-like spread of foliage, which drops away, and in the fall the bulb is returned to its resting-place in the cellar, where it sleeps till spring.

A LEGACY TO CUBA.

MRS. T. C. CARPENTER, of Providence, R. I., in sending us the contents of her little grandson's bank for the Cuban sufferers, writes:

He was a merry, mischievous little fellow, but he was ever thinking of God and poor people in distress. His name was Frank Carpenter Watson, and he was born in Arlington, R. I., August 17, 1892, and died in North Dana, Mass., January 21, 1898. He had been taught to say his "grace" at meal times and his prayers at bed-time, and he never wished to omit these.

Once the loss of a quarter, which had been entrusted to him, troubled his conscience, and he walked up and down the street, his little hands clasped before him, saying in an earnest voice, "O, Lord Jesus, help me find it! Please, Lord Jesus, help me find it!" with the faith we all should have. And thus he prayed until his prayer was answered, for he did find it. In reading the paragraph on "Children's Prayers" in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of March 2, I was reminded of one of his prayers made just a few hours before he died. He had been suffering intense pain for fourteen days. The doctor said the end was near, and yet, even then, when his little life was almost closed, he clasped his thin little hands and prayed: "Please, Lord Jesus, make me a good boy, so I can go to heaven; and help me to do the right things, and please do the very best you can for me. For Jesus' sake. Amen." He was always anxious to see THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as soon as it arrived. The pretty pictures pleased him. The pictures of the sufferers of India had appealed to his sympathy, and he was always wanting to help them "get something to eat" with the pennies in his bank. The enclosed photograph of him was caught when, in a merry mood, he had taken possession of "Grandma's" chair, "specs" and paper, and was ready for a happy time over his beloved pictures. The money sent is what he had saved in his little bank, which please accept for the Cuban sufferers.

"Manda's" Manners.

The following story of how "Manda," a vicious mule, changed her manners, carries a moral that Manda's betters might take to heart:

Manda, writes her master in "How Marcus Ward Saved Oregon," the off leader of a team of mules, and beautiful as a picture, was a good worker, but an inveterate kicker, and no one ventured within range of her heels, save at his peril. One night she received in the hind-leg through a flying picket-pin, a wound so severe that we decided to leave her behind. When we were getting ready to start I went up to the mule that had come with us as a faithful servant all the long journey of 3,000 miles, and began petting her and expressing my regret that we had to leave her. She rubbed me with her nose and laid it on my shoulder, and seemed to beg as eloquently as a dumb beast could, "Don't leave me behind," and with it all, there was a kindly look in her eye that I had never seen there before. I stood stroking her head for some time, then I patted her neck and walked a little back, but constantly on guard. It was then that the mule turned and looked at me, and at the same time held up the wounded leg. Cautiously I took hold of the wounded leg and rubbed it and fondled it without her showing any resentment. I got instruments, sewed the wound up, sewed bandages tightly about the leg, made a capital dressing, and we started, leading Manda. When the bandages became misplaced any one of us could adjust them without interference on her part. She finished the journey with us, and no handsomer animal ever journeyed across the plains. She was never known to kick afterward, and Manda's "change of heart" was a stock expression.

HER EASTER OFFERING.

Written especially for The Christian Herald by James U. Gridley.

I AWOKE with a start, and looking around dreamily could not at first remember where I was. Very soon, however, I realized I was in my room at a hotel in a great eastern city, where I had come to purchase spring goods for the purpose of replenishing my stock in a city in the west. It was Sunday, Easter Sunday, and, after breakfast, I started out for a walk; the smoke which usually hangs over the city, giving everything such a gloomy appearance, had all cleared away, and the morning was beautiful, the "Resurrection Morn;" the sun shone forth in all its splendor, and when I heard the chimes of the church bells ringing out on the clear pure atmosphere, seeming to bear to earth "The Glad Tidings" "Christ is Risen! Christ is Risen!" I felt that it was a greater morn than that on which the foundations of the earth were laid: "When the Morning Stars Sang Together and all the Sons of God shouted for joy."

As I strolled down the street, I came to a magnificent church, before which were many carriages, drawn by beautiful horses in gold and silver mounted harnesses, and driven by coachmen in fine liveries.

I paused and gazed with admiration on all these indications of wealth and luxury, for I knew I was standing before one of the wealthy and fashionable churches of the city. Ascending the marble steps, I entered, and was conducted by one of the ushers to a seat in the rear of the church. Everything within was beautiful and elegant, corresponding to what I had seen without, and I sat and gazed with admiration at the richly dressed congregation and the profuse floral decorations.

An improvised fountain stood in front of the pulpit shooting forth its little jet of sparkling water; and as the rays of the sun shining through the stained-glass window fell upon it as it broke into spray, an I gracefully fell into the receptacle, the little sparkling drops vied in color and brilliancy with the costly gems that adorned many of the ladies of the congregation. Behind the pulpit was a large cross made of Easter lilies, and directly over the pulpit, suspended by invisible wire, was the inscription, "Christ is Risen," wrought in Illies of the valley. To the right was a great mound of Calla lilies; the choir stood behind a screen of palms and American beauties. La France roses nodded their heads in every direction; and, as the ushers moved noiselessly up and down the aisles, the great pipe organ poured forth sweet, soft strains of music, adding much to this scene of enchantment.

After awhile, however, I noticed an air of restlessness in the congregation, and looking at my watch found it was some minutes past the time for services to begin, but the minister had not appeared. The uneasiness of the congregation seemed to increase; groups here and there were whispering low, evidently commenting upon the delay.

The choir, anxious to quiet the restless congregation, were just rendering one of their operatic Easter anthems, in which the soprano's voice seemed to be trying to soar to the clouds, when the door opened and the pastor entered. The congregation gazed in astonishment as they saw him walking down the centre aisle, leading by the hand a poorly clad, pale emaciated girl, apparently about twelve years of age. I recognized her as one whom I had seen selling papers on the street the evening before.

The pastor was elegantly dressed, but his garments were covered with dust, showing that he had recently come in contact with surroundings that were new to him. He was very pale, and when, after seating the little girl in a chair near the platform, he turned and faced the congregation, I noticed an air of deep humility, strangely combined with a look of determination, even sternness. What did it mean? After pausing a moment, he said, in a voice fraught with intense feeling: "We shall dispense with the regular services this morning, and I shall preach to you from a living text. As I was about to leave my house for the church this morning, my little girl came running to me breathless and sobbing, and in accents of grief cried out:

"'Hurry father, Lucy is dying, and Oh! she wants you to pray for her, just once before she dies.'

"Taking me by the hand, my little Mabel took me down the street to an old tenement house, and after climbing two flights of rickety stairs, I entered a dingy, unfurnished room, occupied by five little girls, one of whom sits before you.

"On an old tattered comfort on the floor, in one corner of the room, lay Lucy; the little girl they thought was dying. On examination, I soon found that she had fainted from exhaustion, the result of lack of food; and taking her in my arms, I carried her to my house, where a breakfast of nourishing food, and some words of sympathy and kindness soon restored her.

"It seems that she was in a manner the protege of my little girl, who had for a long time given her discarded dolls and cast-off clothing to this little waif, and had told her of Easter, and of Easter offerings, and that everyone should send to the church an offering—that the rich sent beautiful flowers.

"'Oh how I should like to get one beautiful fine rose to put into that grand church,' said Lucy, 'and do you think,' she continued, 'that them grand ladies would let me do it?'

"Of course she was assured that her little friend would herself place it among the flowers with her own hand.

"The five little girls, all orphans and homeless, had united their earnings, and had bought the scanty food upon which they subsisted, but one had fallen sick, so the burden fell upon the others; and in addition, this little girl took it upon herself to provide medicine for her sick companion.

"But the thought of sending to the church an offering was constantly with her and she denied herself necessary food in order to buy this little rose."

As he spoke, he stepped forward, and from a large vase of magnificent flowers, took one little pink rose, faded and beginning to wither; and holding it up in view of his great congregation, said: "Which think you is the more pleasing in the eyes of the risen Saviour this morning, the costly flowers filling the rich and rare vases, their perfume extending all over this immense building, even filling the galleries with their sweetness, or this pale little, almost odorless, rose, which cost the giver so much of a sacrifice?

"I do not believe that there is a man in this congregation who has given up the pleasure of even a single cigar in order that he might make an Easter offering. I do not believe that there is a lady present who has denied herself the expenditure of one cent less in the purchase of an Easter bonnet, that she might make an Easter offering. Were these beautiful flowers sent here that they might please God, or were they sent here for the purpose of gratifying the vanity and pride of this church? You out of your abundance have given, she hath given out of her poverty and want. You have shown your liberality, and have made to the world a marvelous display of asthetic taste, she has shown a greater liberality, in that she hath given her all.

"You have made no sacrifice in giving, she hath sacrificed her daily bread.

"My friends, I have been for years a fashionable pastor of a fashionable church, drawing a large salary from a rich congregation, endeavoring on every Sabbath day to preach a sermon that would be agreeable to my hearers, but henceforth I shall follow the example of him whose resurrection we celebrate to-day, and may we all live as if we believe 'He is risen indeed, and that he hath by the Holy Spirit, appeared not only to Simon, but unto us all.'

"If you do not desire to hear these truths, you can at any time have my resignation.

"'Ye cannot serve God and Mammon.' Henceforth, I shall endeavor to serve God.

"HE HELD UP ONE LITTLE PINK ROSE, FADED AND BEGINNING TO WITHER."

"Take this lesson home, imagine ur little girl deprived of parents and h e, dying for the lack of a crust of bre: n the very shadow of stately mansions.

"To show that we are this mo s touched by this divine influence, let and all of us now, this glorious da e solve to follow the footsteps of the ek and lowly Saviour, which will lead u ot only to the rescue of the five hom ss orphans, but to other homes where v- erty and misery dwell, where many out immediate help may be relieved ily by the angel of death.

"I, myself, will give one-tenth o my salary to the support of an Orp 's Home in our midst: let us lay the fo a- tion by giving each and all of us : ve have profited, by the help of the Al mighty."

After this discourse the pastor ot ed up a prayer such as had never been l r in that church before, seeming to t his whole being into that appeal.

The effect on the congregation as marvelous; his hearers were spell-bo d, and with bowed heads, and tears many eyes, after the prayer was e d for more than a minute, the silence as profound.

At breakfast next morning I pick up a daily paper, and looking over th re ports of the work of the churches th ay before, I was attracted by the headli .

Antagonism in Africa.

AMID the general condition of unrest which pervades almost the whole world, one of the most critical questions relates to the region of Western Africa. There the interests of England and France are in antagonism, as seriously as they are in China, and there is even more danger of a conflict being precipitated there on account of the aggressive character of the French expeditions, which are not directly under the control of the French Government. It is claimed by the British authorities that while the expeditions of French territory have all the prestige of Government expeditions, they have abused British territory in the character of explorers, whose proceedings were disavowed in Paris. There is a general agreement that a nation having a settlement on the coast is entitled to control the territory stretching from it inland, which is known as the hinterland. But in Western Africa the coast line facing the south swing its great shoulder turns abruptly and faces the west. It is obvious that there must be a region in the interior which may be regarded as the hinterland of a nation having settlements on the southern coast, or of a nation having settlements on the western coast. It so happens that this region, which lies on the south of the Great Desert, and on the west of Lake Chad, is particularly desirable, being fertile, thickly populated, and easy of access. The French pushing eastward from Senegal, and the British pushing northward from Nigeria, are now face to face in the disputed territory, and it will be difficult to avoid a collision. Both nations are reported to be strengthening their forces in the region, and the press, both in Paris and London, teems with bellicose articles. Whether the diplomatists will be able to adjust the dispute peaceably remains to be seen, but the situation has become acute. The reason for England's tenacity is obvious. Because if the French claims be admitted, the important territory of Nigeria will be shut off from all communication with the interior. This territory is becoming increasingly valuable on account of its trade. It contains the seaport of Lagos, which is the only safe harbor along a coast of a thousand miles. The fact that two great nations can be brought to the verge of war by a dispute over the possession of a strip of land in Africa shows how far we still are from that ideal time when national jealousies shall cease, and the governments of the world shall peacefully work together for the common good.

They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord (Isa. 11 : 9).

Testator's Wish Disregarded.

A novel case is reported by a legal journal. It was brought by a lifeboat institution to annul the conditions of a bequest. It appears that some years ago the sum of fifty thousand dollars was bequeathed to the institution to purchase and maintain, at two specified dangerous points of the coast, two lifeboats, the sole condition being that the boats should be of a particular kind, of which the testator was the inventor. The two boats were purchased and put in service, but the lifesaving crews, after several experiments, refused to use them any longer. It was then decided to ask the courts for permission to disregard the conditions of the will. This has been granted on the ground that the condition nullified the purpose of the testator, the lifeboats being useless when men would not go out in them. The bequest will now be used to buy boats which can be used. The decision of the court was just, but it may be doubted whether it does not itself nullify the purpose of the testator, which probably was to bring his own invention into practical use. If so, his selfish purpose has been turned to the general good in spite of his stipulations. This has sometimes happened in the history of the church when men have tried to serve themselves in serving Christ.

Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife. . . . What then? Notwithstanding every way, whether in pretence or in truth, Christ is preached, and I therein do rejoice (Phil. 1 : 15, 18).

A Fortune from Refuse.

A mining company, whose offices are in New York, received a report recently from their agent in California, which caused them some chagrin. Among the properties owned by the company is a mine about ten miles from the Colorado River, which, after being worked for many years, was believed to be worked out and was abandoned. The San Diego Sun says that the last lessee was confident that the mine would still be productive if money were expended upon it. He did his utmost to get the necessary capital to develop it, but failed. He left everything standing and quitted it in disgust. A few months ago a prospector who visited the mine noticed at the back of the mill a large heap of debris, technically called "tailings," which he thought might be worth working. He offered the company ten cents a ton for it, and estimated that there was a hundred thousand tons of it. They had not expected to make anything more out of the mine, so they willingly accepted the offer. The speculator bought a cyanide plant, hired a few Mexican laborers and set to work on the mound. After working it for three months, an agent of the company called upon him to receive the money. He asked how the speculation was turning out and learned, to his amazement, that it had already netted the speculator fifty thousand dollars, and he expected that by the time he had finished the mound, which would be in about three years, he would have made two hundred thousand dollars more. The chagrin of the company on hearing of this fact may be imagined. They cannot be said to have lost anything, and, as a matter of fact, they gained ten thousand dollars more than they ever expected to gain out of the old mine, but it is not a pleasant reflection for them that they had had the opportunity of making a quarter of a million dollars and had missed it. A similar discovery will be made at the last by many Christians who now make no effort to win souls for Christ from the human refuse that is going to waste on all sides of us. They will not lose their own souls, but they will miss the crown that Christ will give to those who toil for him.

They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever (Daniel 12 : 3).

Neutralizing Forces.

A scientific journal publishes an interesting argument which was recently carried on before the Western Railway Club. The question was as to the advantage or disadvantage of a flexible track. On the one hand it was contended that as in a flexible track there is a depression under each wheel, it follows that the point ahead of the wheel is correspondingly raised and therefore the wheel is continually confronted with a track inclined upward, which is equivalent to climbing a never-ending grade. Prof. Goss, of Purdue University, who took the other side of the argument, pointed out that such a view is only partial, and the conclusions only in a measure true—the fact being lost sight of that the rail behind the wheel is also higher than portions immediately under its tread, and that while the wheel may, for a moment, be considered as ascending a grade, it may also, at the same moment, be descending a grade. As a matter of fact, while the wheel is required to act upon the rail and press it down as it advances, the rail behind the wheel is reacting upon the wheel and tending to push it ahead, and these two forces in a perfectly elastic track will simply neutralize each other. The momentum gained by the wheel in its descent is as great as the resistance it encounters on the corresponding up-grade. If, therefore, the track returns promptly and completely to its original shape, no energy is lost by the passing engine or train on account of the flexibility of the track. The world is full of such compensations and the fact has often been quoted as evidence that it was designed by a mind of infinite wisdom. It is especially remarkable in matters of providential control. We often see the very things which seem to tend to difficulty and disaster overruled for progress. Paul mentions one such instance in his own experience.

I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which have happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the Gospel (Phil. 1 : 12).

Filed His Way.

A successful merchant tells in the Cleveland Plain-Dealer how he gained his first step to fortune. At the age of fourteen it became necessary for him to contribute a share to the income of his mother, who was a widow. He applied for work at every place where there seemed any likelihood of success, but at the end of two weeks was still unemployed. Going home one day, dispirited, he saw a sign, "boy wanted" and went into the store where it hung. He was sent into the merchant's office, where the busy man was writing rapidly. He was told to wait a few minutes till the letter in hand was finished. Noticing that the door by which he had entered would not keep shut and that the gusts of November wind were blowing it open continually, he looked at the latch and saw the cause at once. There had been a shrinkage in the frame so that the socket was a hair-breadth lower than the latch. He told the merchant that if he could bear a minute's noise he could fix that door. He was told gruffly to go ahead. He had in his pocket a file with which he had been sharpening his skates and in a minute had filed the socket down so that it would admit the latch. This done and the door closed, the boy sat down to wait. "Did you fix the door?" the merchant asked, when his letter was finished. The boy pointed to it triumphantly. "Well," said the merchant, "that is good and I'll give you a trial." Twenty years afterward the boy was the merchant's partner with a half share in the business. Some boys would have thought it no part of their duty to do a little thing of that kind, but the merchant appreciated a boy who would make himself useful and so gave him the opportunity that he turned to so good an account. Many servants of Christ have been able to serve their Master in a similar way. The medical missionaries and the missionaries who taught the heathen the arts of civilization have frequently gained a hearing for their message by secular service that they could not have gained if they had limited their services to their calling as preachers.

I am made all things to all men that I might by all means save some and this I do for the gospel's sake, that I might be partaker thereof with you (1 Cor. 9 : 22).

THE MARKET-PLACE OF LAGOS, THE CHIEF SEA-PORT OF NIGERIA, WEST AFRICA.

An Outcast by Choice.

The New York newspapers reported last week the death of an eccentric man. For the past ten years he has lived in one of the lodging-houses of the Bowery, and does not appear during that time ever to have gone far away from that thoroughfare. He was familiarly known as "Doc" in a society which uses nicknames more than proper names. "Doc" acquired his by kindness to the habitues of the lodging-house in which he happened to be living for the time being. If one was sick, he would ask him about his ailment and get him a bottle of medicine, for which "Doc" paid. He was friendly with the people he came in contact with in the lodging-houses, but could never be induced to talk about his past. After his death his secret was disclosed. He was formerly a rich cotton-broker of New Orleans, but had left that city on account of a family trouble. Ten years ago one of his wealthy relatives left him a legacy, the interest on which was to be paid him weekly. It yielded him ten dollars a week, and this sum he drew every Monday morning. His family often urged him to quit the Bowery and live respectably, but he replied that he preferred the company of the people who appreciated him. He fell ill a few days ago and was missed from his usual haunts. One afternoon a fellow-lodger opened the door of the dingy room, where he lay, and saw that he was dead. He had died alone as he had lived. It was a strange life for an educated man, accustomed to refined surroundings, to choose. Probably the whole story has not even yet been told. Doubtless something had occurred to make him disgusted with his former associates, and to give him a taste for the squalid life he led. It shows how largely the question of motive determines the quality of an act. As we read of his voluntary humiliation we only wonder at his eccentricity, while as we read of the humiliation Christ endured in quitting his high estate to live among men, we are moved to adoration because he did it to save them.

Who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant (Phil. 2 : 7).

Food Trains Speeding Across Cuba.

The Relief Work Progressing Splendidly and Saving Many Thousands of Precious Lives.

DR. KLOPSCH'S VISIT TO SUFFERING MATANZAS.

A Realistic Picture of the Horrors of Starvation — All the Relief Work Now Well Organized and Great Trains of Supplies Touching at all the Centres of Suffering—Nearly 300,000 Starving Peasants Registered and Receiving Relief.

AMID many warlike rumors and gathering clouds of trouble on every side, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S life-saving work in Cuba still goes on. No obstacle has yet arisen to interfere with this sacred mission which has been so divinely blessed and protected, and which has already resulted in rescuing many thousands of helpless and destitute human beings from death by starvation. These results alone, if nothing further were achieved, amply repay the benevolent people of this Christian land for all their practical sympathy and self-sacrifice. They have done for stricken Cuba what it was impossible to do in Armenia and India — their gifts of food have reached every centre of suffering and they have the precious satisfaction of knowing that for days past, every starving man, woman, and child in that afflicted island has been existing upon their bounty and that for a brief space at least the gaunt wolves of famine have been driven back from countless Cuban households. This battle with death must now be carried on with increased energy. It is only the outposts that have been carried thus far—only a temporary reprieve from starvation that has been secured for the apparently doomed reconcentrados. But it is welcome news that so much has been accomplished, since it points to the possibility of a grander triumph. Weeks ago THE CHRISTIAN HERALD declared that if the sympathetic Christian people of America united in a resolute effort to save the dying Cuban peasants, they could do so in less than a single month. At that time the relief movement was in process of organization. Dr Klopsch having just arrived in Cuba. With splendid zeal, our people have responded to the call. They have sent cargoes of food to all the provinces, and medicines for the sick and clothing for the naked. At this writing they are feeding 296,000 destitute in over 400 towns and villages. But the food supplies on hand must be supplemented by fresh cargoes weekly, if the battle with famine is to be carried through to final victory. We have the fullest confidence that those who have so gloriously begun this work will not suffer it to languish. It is one that lies very near to the hearts of the readers of this journal. When poor Cuba lay prostrate and dying they, before and furnished an Orphanage for the parentless children, and supplied nurses and medicines for the sick. It was their contributions which enabled THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to send Clara Barton to Havana with her Red Cross workers. Their generosity thrilled the whole country and induced our national government to aid the relief movement. It was not surprising that in the recent addresses on Cuba delivered in Congress, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers should have been recognized as the pioneers in this great humanitarian life-saving mission of the century. But far more precious than the approval of the world is the consciousness that what they have done is well-pleasing to the Master whom they serve.

RECEPTION BY THE GOVERNOR.

The letter below, received from Dr. Klopsch, describes his visit to Matanzas, one of the centres of great suffering:

"The saddest twelve hours spent in many a year were those devoted to a visit to Matanzas, a few years ago an opulent, busy, populous seaport town doing the most extensive export trade on the island of Cuba, next to Havana, but now the miserable abode of fifteen thousand wretched, poverty smitten, yet peaceable and law-abiding people—three-fourths of whom are face to face with the slow, lingering, painful death by starvation. At five o'clock in the morning I left the hotel for the ferry over Havana bay to Guanabacoa, whence the train starts for towns located on the northern coast. Three cars were attached to the engine, one containing Spanish soldiers armed to the teeth for the protection of the passengers from attack by the insurgents, who, the very day after, fired on the same train, wounding two men—one seriously, the other only slightly. From the beginning to end of the journey we passed through a country of destroyed villages, burned crops, barricaded stations, hungry-looking people, razor-backed pigs and skeletonized horses, with not a solitary point of attraction the whole length of 60 miles.

"At nine o'clock we reached Matanzas, and instantly we were surrounded by hundreds of starved men, women and children, piteously holding out their thin hands and gazing at us with eyes deep sunken from between unnaturally protruding cheek-bones, many of them crying, 'For the love of God, give me a centavo (cent).' while others stood mute, as though they lacked strength to give utterance to the same plea. We had with us on the train part of the Congressional Committee and among them Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, who, looking out of the window at some of the pigs, remarked that when pigs fail to find enough to feed on, the task for a human being is a hopeless one. The American Consul at Matanzas, Mr. Brice, met us at the station and escorted us first to the consulate, then to the palace, where he introduced the entire party to the Governor of Matanzas Province, who received us very kindly, and quickly improvised a neat little reception, summoning his wife, her sis-

"The Governor, Mr. de Armas, is a kind-hearted, elderly gentleman, who has spent many years of his life in the United States, and who deeply deplores the wretched condition of his own country. In response to a request for accurate information as to the real status of suffering in his province, he sent for a large chart full of statistical information, which, with voice almost choked with emotion, while his eyes were filled with tears, he proceeded to explain. He said that in the city of Matanzas 1,500 deaths from starvation had occurred in November last, 1,500 in December, 700 in January, and 500 in February, and that on the fifth of November, the day he took the chair, fifteen unfortunates actually starved to death in the public square opposite his palace. Very feelingly, he thanked us for what Americans had done in the matter of relief, assuring us that he would gladly do everything in his power to facilitate the work. He then offered Miss Barton a public reception in the evening, which, however, was promptly declined for lack of time. At the close of the interview, under the leadership of a mounted military escort, we proceeded to the three hospi-ness, wretchedness, and starvation seen to be most pronounced, and then turned to pursue the journey back to H vana. As we passed Jaruco, Mrs. Fan B. Ward, an American journalist, w was one of our party, asked for aid in half of a woman, the story of whose fering is ineffably sad. Her husb was a planter, and one day, while out the field working, some Spanish tro drew up to inquire which way a comp of insurgents had taken. He answe that he did not know, whereupon t killed him and six of the farm help, kil a daughter, and as the mother came the door to learn the cause of the sh ing, a bullet grazed her infant in ar crippling it for life. Now the woma a helpless, homeless beggar, continu crying and bemoaning her dead. I name is Carolina Bello y Rubio.

"But the worst of the famine is the la army of poverty-stricken people known 'silent sufferers' who, a few years wealthy and respected, are to-day in abject, beggared condition, but who too proud to make their circumstan known. They pawn one thing after other until nothing is left, and then t lie down to die—never complaining, ne asking relief. In Havana alone there sup sed to be over 7,000 of that class. No ng but personal visitation will dis- y them, and unfortunately we have r itr the time nor the opportunity to k p this work. Recently, however, se were taken by the representatives f t American newspapers now here to vat the course of events, to organize the chairmanship of General Lee, gr reat-hearted Consul-General, in order t e up this line of relief, and I have o sed them substantial assistance in b f of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD read- s d on the completion of their organ- a n.

"ow, a few words about how relief is r histered. In the town of Matanzas a committee of local physicians has b officially appointed: Dr. A. Ulmo, c Drs. F. de Veza, F. Carbarocca, Garcia, D. L. Madan, L. Cuni and omero. This committee visits the s and issues tickets for the amount od required, each ticket receiving e gnature of the kind-hearted Govern-, some other of the civil authorities, beros (firemen) who as a society have been engaged in charitable work, g supported a very extensive dispen- sar take the food to the sufferers. The A rican Consul, Mr. Brice, who during e ast two years has given away $200 o than his entire salary, manages the o house, honors the tickets, reserving e ight to stop supplies whenever he s reason to suspect mis-application of reli . Mr. Brice has also appointed a c mittee of three American ladies to in vestigate 'silent sufferers' and relieve them i dependently of the Governor's signa- t . I have just sent Mr. Brice a ch for $1,000 in the name of THE H RISTIAN HERALD readers to be ap- d in this work. L. KLOPSCH."

Th cablegrams received from Dr. Kl sch give most cheering news of the pr ess of the relief work in Cuba. It n w splendidly organized and the new c mittee, under General Lee, is doing m efficient service. Miss Barton has l t Havana for a time, although she pr ises to return on an early day. Every cit town and village in Cuba, where re- co centrados are suffering, now has its rel station, conducted by an efficient co mittee. Supplies of food for ten days ar regularly sent, accompanied with medici s where the latter are needed. As ev y all the mayors under the new re ne are Cubans, the local relief co mittee work is under Cuban co rol, and is honestly and ex- pe tiously done. All our consu are lending most valuable as tance. Every detail of t system of distribution no in force has been l ned by Dr. Klopsch, w the active co-opera- ti and cordial approval General Lee. An idea o the extent and character o the system may be gath- er from the following fa s concerning its operation.

In Havana and its suburbs th are about 12,000 destitute. Di tributed in towns and villages, as fo ow:

To meet their needs, bakeries have been ened (as was the case with THE CHRIS- N HERALD work in Van, Armenia, ler Dr. Grace Kimball), and all bread relief work is baked there. Cornmeal l bacon are supplied in the proportion one pound of food per day for each per n. A diet kitchen has been established St. Lazarin street, Havana, which feeds 00 sick daily, and a Central Relief Sta- n on Estrella street, which feeds be- een 10,000 and 12,000. There is also a chen at Ancha del Norte, where 2,000 fed daily. At Sagua la Grande, Mr. Barker, our consul, is feeding 1,000 a day. Similar relief stations have been opened at Santa Cruz del Norte (where the reconcentrados were in the last stages of starvation when relief arrived), at Artemisa, (which was also in a dreadful condition), at Guanabacoa (where the Fund has secured a large building and grounds for the work), and at Caras, Matanzas, Virtudes, Cienfuegos, and a large number of other towns, relief depots are in successful operation. Distribution of relief supplies is by ticket which must be presented and checked to prevent imposture or duplication. The tickets read:

Three men, specially appointed, travel constantly throughout the island, observing the work and guarding against diversion or improper use of the supplies. 296,000 are now registered on the books of the Relief Fund in Havana.

Last week THE CHRISTIAN HERALD shipped through the Central Relief Committee $20,000 worth of supplies from New York, chiefly corn meal and bacon.

These, together with the cargoes afloat, give assurance of food sufficient to last for ten days to come, but no longer. Now that all points of destitution have been reached, it is more than ever necessary to hasten the sending of liberal supplies by the semi-weekly steamers.

Harrowing stories of suffering among the reconcentrados continue to be received. A correspondent who returned from Havana to New York several days ago declares that Matanzas, before the relief came, was the most dreadful place he had ever seen. Five hundred and fifty have died of starvation since March 1, according to Col. Brice, but the death rate is now greatly reduced. Women in the hospitals were faintly calling for food, when none was to be had. Fortunately the fund was able to send sufficient food to the place for several days. The first five tons were sent there on March 1. Many of the sufferers have gone insane through their calamities. The sight of mothers, themselves little more than skeletons, weeping over their dying children, was enough to melt hearts of stone.

A cablegram from Dr. Klopsch states: "Splendid progress is being made in relief work. The whole island of Cuba is now covered by the new system which has been put into operation. Twenty-three railroad cars, loaded with food and with a supply of medicines, started from Havana on Saturday to different parts of the island. The contents of these cars will bring joy, gladness and hope into the lives of multitudes to whom American charity has heretofore been an idle dream, but it is now a blessed reality.

"Gen. Lee is enthusiastic over the improved condition of affairs, and the Bishop of Havana personally came to offer me his congratulations."

A later dispatch says: "The relief train has been very satisfactorily heard from all along the line. We are all satisfied that the new method of distribution is a great success."

The hospital work, too, has been extended, and now includes Matanzas, Sagua, Cardenas and Santiago.

Arrangements are well under way for sending a special CHRISTIAN HERALD steamer-load of supplies, and should no unforseen complications arise, the vessel will probably sail early in April with the largest cargo yet taken to Cuba.

Consul-General Lee speaks very freely of the present status of the relief work. He says:

"I am happy to know that now all matters pertaining to the reception and distribution of American supplies to the poor of Cuba are progressing successfully. The people of the United States, in assisting to support some 200,000 destitute people, have undertaken a colossal task. The modes of procedure and the details connected therewith presented many troublesome features at the outset, but now most of these difficulties have been overcome. Everything is in good working order.

ESCORT ON OUR TRAIN TO MATANZAS.

"Donors can rest absolutely assured that what they have sent here reaches those for whom it was intended. At first, owing to the meagre supplies and the large number of the poor in the city of Havana and its vicinity, the distribution was necessarily confined to those localities. Now, however, everything is coming in great abundance, and those supplies are reaching all parts of the island. I have been unable to give close attention to the details of relief work, owing to the heavy and exacting duties of the Consular office. But my attention has been arrested by many conscientious workers.

"Recently Dr. Klopsch, member of the Central Cuban Relief Committee of New York, has given much of his time and attention to the business of relief. This interest is natural, owing to the close connection he has had with the collection of funds applied to the purchase of relief supplies. His labors here are now bearing abundant fruit."

Dr. and Mrs. Klopsch were presented to Governor-General Blanco by Gen. Lee and were graciously received. The attitude of Gen. Blanco toward the relief work conducted by Americans has been friendly throughout.

In many States of our Union the Cuban relief movement is assuming large proportions. Kansas City promises to send a shipload of supplies; school children of the States of New York and New Jersey will send another. Boards of Trade and Exchanges in numerous cities have appointed relief committees to raise funds for the purchasing of food. The Ward, Mallory, Munson, and Spanish-American steamship lines are doing generous work in carrying all supplies free to Havana. The nation realizes the full import of Dr. Klopsch's statement, that 300,000 starving and dying reconcentrados have to be fed and kept alive until permanent relief comes. It is not to be wondered at, as he has cabled, that these suffering ones should look upon America as "the home of angels," since it has been their only hope of rescue from the fate that has overtaken nearly half a million of their fellows.

ON A RECONCENTRADO SETTLEMENT, MATANZAS.

Among the hundreds of letters received daily, containing offerings for Cuba, are many containing fervent prayers and wishes for the welfare of the sufferers and the success of the relief work. Extracts from a few are given below:

"Accept this small offering for the suffering ones in Cuba for Jesus' sake. I wish it were more," writes Mrs. Jane B. S., Wichita, Kan. (26 cents).

Mrs. S. H. B. and Mrs. Levi C., Kiesgeville, Pa. ($1.26), given in sympathy with the Cubans. "May God bless our country; peace again restored, and Cuban suffering ended."

S. G. Benstead and G. C. Corston, Buffalo, N. Y. ($3.00), writes: "Trusting it may be blessed by our Father in Heaven."

Woodhaven, N. Y. ($1.00) "May this mite help some one for Christ's sake. Amen."

"May this offering be the means of saving some life and bring them to see the underlying power of a Saviour's love in all this work" is the prayer of A. H. A., Angola, N. Y. ($2.00).

The King's Daughters' Cuban Relief Sewing Circle, lately organized by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, last week made a shipment of over 1,000 garments for the reconcentrado mothers and children. The Circle solicits contributions of muslin, calico, linen, cotton, sheeting, etc., at its headquarters, 17 Astor Place, New York City.

All contributions to the Relief Fund should be addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York, and will be fully acknowledged in these columns.

THAT EASTER MEANS.

The Message of the Queen of Festivals to the World.

THE early Christians were wont to greet each other on Easter morning with "The Lord is risen," to which the reply was, "He is risen indeed." These words find an echo in our feelings to-day. Even the children catch the spirit of joy and enthusiasm which are shared on Easter morning. Though it be only the child's joy in the profusion of flowers and the little gaieties of the wardrobe that are added in honor of the day, they respond to the joyful spirit that fills older Christian hearts and share in the gladness that the festival brings. But on in life, when one and another and one has passed out of sight beyond the impenetrable veil, Easter comes to have a deeper meaning to us, bringing them hopes of reunion and reminding them of the glorious hope on which those hopes are based.

How great is the change in our entire outlook that was wrought by that day! If Christ had not risen, his religion would have been a mere philosophy, purer and grander than other systems, but only a cult, a school which could have had little potency in succeeding generations. To preach a dead Christ would have been to confess a failure, to admit that the Lord of life had been compelled to bow, like all the rest of us, to the last enemy. The grief of the disciples as they went to Emmaus showed how dark the prospect was. And how dispirited were his followers. But when they were able to go to the world with the offer of eternal life from One who had triumphed over death, then they could feel confidence in their message. They saw, as we see, how the resurrection of Christ set the seal of divinity on his work. They could proclaim no doctrine or theory, but a living Christ, who in his own person had proved his right to say: "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live." That is why we decorate our churches and why glad voices join in enraptured song on Easter day.

It is not only continued life that is promised in our Easter celebrations. Life here with its burdens and sorrows, its anxieties and sufferings, is not so joyous a thing that the promise of its renewal after death would cheer us as we go down into the grave. It is life in new conditions, and with new powers that is promised. It does not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he appears we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. The beautiful flowers with which we adorn our churches on Easter morn are not more unlike the dull seeds or bulbs from which they sprang than our lives will be to these dull and burdened lives that we now live. The butterfly that emerges from the chrysalis leaves behind it the poor shell in which it used to crawl from leaf to leaf, and, spreading its wings, flies an ethereal creature, rejoicing in the sunlight. Nature seems to have provided this one changed form as a special encouragement to men, an object lesson, holding them hope for a transformation as startling in contrast to be worked on the human form. Even now we feel within us the capacity for such a changed life. Our thoughts which fly to distant scenes, while our bodies remain anchored to one place, our dreams that pass over infinite spaces speak to us of powers yet unrealized in mortal life.

Nor is it of the future alone that Easter speaks. There is a resurrection that may be attained in life. The dead soul, absorbed in money-getting, or in pleasure, is as unresponsive as a corpse to appeals from the spiritual side; but let the Holy Spirit touch that dead soul, and it quickens with new life, new perceptions, new hopes, new motives spring into being, and love goes forth from it to the whole world. There is a new birth, which begins a new life, as different from the old one as if it were lived by a new man in a new world. The soul that was dead becomes alive. So it learns the lesson of the apostle and knows the power of Christ's resurrection.

Hallelujah! Christ is Risen.

Easter's Message.

Lo! it brings you greeting, children,
This dear, gladsome Easter day;
Listen, that you catch the message,—
What the Easter lilies say.

In the floral kingdom, children,
None there are more pure and fair;
Nor a sweeter message, dearer,
Comes to us from anywhere.

When the dying Saviour, children,
Gave his promise to the earth,
And the resurrection, flow'r-like,
Taught us of another birth.

Then the fragrant lily, children,
In its raiment pure and white,
Blossomed as the symbol, clearly,
Of the dark that ends in light.

So they tell us yearly, children,
As each Easter-tide comes round,
Tell us hope unceasing, trusting,
Till the life we seek is found.

Thus the message brought you, children,
By this precious Easter day
Is the silent teaching, holy,
In the lily's perfect way.

TO EVANGELIZE BRAZIL.

Encouraging Outlook for Protestant Missions—Indians of the Amazon Valley.

EVANGELIST George R. Witte, who is now laboring among the South American Indians in Brazil, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a most interesting letter describing the present condition and prospects of the work. He says: "That the climatic dangers in some portions of Brazil are great, no one will deny, but they are no greater than they are in some parts of Africa, nor are they sufficient to keep the trader in rubber and other Brazilian products away. Surely these men, acting on selfish motives, have no more heroism than has ever yet been found among the missionaries of the cross.

"No efforts have yet been made by Protestants to reach the Indians of the Amazon Valley, excepting two beginnings by the South American Missionary Society of London. These terminated fatally, because at that time it was necessary to obtain the consent of the Governor of the State in order to start a Protestant mission, and he intentionally directed the missionaries to localities where no white man could live long. At the present time no consent is necessary, and missionaries may go where they like. The highlands in Central Brazil are not at all unhealthy. Nor is the language any greater hindrance than that which has been successfully overcome in other portions of the globe. While there are many dialects, yet they are all related to one another, and Governor Magalhaes was enabled, by his knowledge of Tupi, to make himself understood everywhere.

"Of this language we fortunately possess a number of excellent grammars. I myself possess four different ones, one Portuguese, one Spanish, and two by German scholars. Being still busy with studying Portuguese, I have not yet commenced the study of Tupi, but an examination of the books leads us to think that the language will not offer any serious difficulty.

"In consequence of an appeal, published by me a year ago, two workers in Brazil were sent to the Indians. From a letter, just received, I learn that these brethren have reached Gayaz, and met with a friendly reception. In company with Dr. and Mrs. Graham, of Scotland, whose acquaintance I made at a Baltimore college, I shall, probably within a month, start for the same State.

"Brazilian Protestants are likewise beginning to awake to the duties which they themselves owe to the indigenous races of their country. At Pernambuco a committee has been formed to aid in carrying the Gospel to the Indians. Several men have volunteered for the work, and the committee is soliciting pecuniary aid to send them out.

"Hearing of this just at this juncture, when we are preparing to start, I cannot fail to recognize the hand of God in it, that he wants to supply us with the very co-workers whom we need."

Mr. Witte's address is the American Consulate, Para, Brazil.

The Bowery Mission Inquest.

Coroner Antonio Zucca and a coroner's jury, who held the inquest on the recent fire in the Bowery Mission after hearing a large number of witnesses, rendered a verdict fully exonerating the Mission authorities. They found that the Mission had complied with the law to the fullest extent, both as to the arrangements of the building itself and the protection afforded against fire. In his testimony the Fire Marshal stated that the Bowery Mission had more means of exit, and consequently was safer in case of fire, than any other Mission lodging-house on that thoroughfare.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

HELPFUL ANECDOTES

By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D.

HEROIC DEVOTION.

ONE of the Reuter's special service officials states that he has paid several visits to the hospital, in which there were being treated many Turkish soldiers, and that he was struck by the warlike spirit of the wounded, and the frequency with which they asked, "Do you I'll be well in time for the next battle?"

These doctors are surprised by the wonderful vitality of the Turks. One man who had his stomach penetrated by a bullet, not only kept his place in the ranks till the battle was over, but marched a distance of ten miles afterwards. Another, with three wounds, two in the leg and one in the shoulder, continued in the performance of his regular duties for twenty-four hours after receiving them, and would probably have kept about until they healed had not an officer, happening to notice his condition, told him to go to the hospital; and it was with the greatest reluctance that the wounded soldier went. The doctors remark upon the rapidity with which patients recover from wounds, and attribute it to the abstenious lives led by the Turkish soldiers, who drink no wine, eat but little meat, and take plenty of vegetables. They are examples of the saying, "Prevention is better than cure." By their manner of living they escape the effects from which grosser livers suffer when wounded. We need in the Christian church, in order for speedy victory for the banner of the Cross, men and women who live holy lives, which bid defiance to the devil's darts, and whose enthusiastic love for Christ makes them rejoice at the prospects of battle for him.

The Shattered Ring.

The seal worn by the Pope of Rome and used by him on official documents to which his signature is attached, has on it the engraving of a fish, with a cipher of the wearer. Since the thirteenth century, every Pope has worn a ring of this character. The rings, however, are not handed down from one Pope to another, but are purely personal.

When the Pope dies, his ring is shattered with a hammer, to prevent its being used on a forged document. When a man gets old like the present Pope, he must often look at his ring, and wonder how many times more it will be used before it is broken by the hammer. But life is so uncertain with all of us that, if we are wise, we will carefully use the seal of our influence and power while we may, ere the hammer of death shall shatter it.

The Happiness of Service.

A brave Atlanta girl, well known in society, who happened to be at Key West at the time of the Maine disaster, has made herself the heroine of the hour ever since the wounded and suffering sailors were brought to the National Hospital from Havana.

She watched from her winter home the pitiful procession of wounded men and haggard officers as they slowly passed by on their way to the hospital, and went immediately and offered her services. Her proffered help was gratefully accepted. Ever since she has untiringly given all her waking time to this service. Much of her days are spent in the kitchen of her home, assisting a typical "black mammy" in preparing delicacies with which to tempt the appetites of the feverish inmates of the hospital. The gentle young volunteer nurse has been a source of great comfort to the patients at this trying time. Forgetful of self, she has soothed, not only the injured, but been an angel of mercy and consolation to the dying. She declares that the greatest happiness she has ever known has come to her on beholding the glad light of welcome in the eyes of wounded men, whose pale, wan faces have learned to watch for her coming. This young woman has pierced the secret of real happiness, which is always to be found, not in selfishness, but in self-forgetful service for others.

The Wisdom of Soul-Winning.

Collecting gold nuggets is a fad that the Klondike craze is answerable for. A great many individuals have been making collections of gold in the rough, but the finest collection ever seen is in the possession of two brothers named Conrad, who are in business in Seattle. The largest nugget in their collection is valued at $985.

The nugget next in value is worth $400, and came from Montana. Another, worth $250, was taken from the Nevada Creek mines. One of the biggest nuggets has an interesting history. It was so big that it was overlooked altogether. The miners, not being prepared for the sight of so rich a find all at once, threw it out of the boxes with the forkings, but it refused to be treated so ignominiously, and continued to attract attention by its gleaming light until found, and joyfully added to the day's profits by the miners. The Conrad brothers are by no means satisfied with the collection as it stands, but are on the lookout for lumps of gold to add to their remarkable collection. Every Christian has the opportunity of gathering nuggets of heavenly gold by winning souls to Christ. If the heart is once possessed with that purpose, no other joy will ever be sweet enough to give satisfaction. No other treasure is so rich as the treasures of an immortal soul. "He that winneth souls is wise."

America's Greates

Medicine—GREATEST because it does what all other medicines fail to do. Scrofula is the most insidious disease which taints the blood of the people, producing incalculable suffering to many, while in others it is a latent fire liable to burst into activity and produce untold misery on the least provocation. Now, a medicine that can meet this common enemy of mankind and repeatedly effect the wonderful, yes, miraculous cures Hood's Sarsaparilla has—even when other remedies had totally failed and all hope of cure had been given up.—clearly has won the title of America's Greatest Medicine.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"Gentlemen:—For nearly thirty years was a sufferer from the effects of scrofula and impure blood, and though doctoring nearly all that time I did not find relief, and I had practically given up all hope of ever recovering my health. HEATHENDOM'S CALL.

Lessons from Great Missionaries. Acts 13: 1-3; 13-33; 42-52.

There is no proof more convincing to a fair-minded man, of the divine origin of Christianity, than its spread over the whole civilized globe. Wherever it has been preached converts have been made and the same results have appeared in every race. The white, the red, the yellow, and the black races have found in it a religion adapted to their needs, and those who have been most imbued with it have manifested the best spirit and the purest lives. For this test, we are indebted to the missionaries who have given their lives to the work of proclaiming the Gospel to nations which had not previously heard it. These brave, devoted men and women are themselves a testimony to the supernatural character of our faith. How otherwise can we account for men of intelligence and education voluntarily expatriating themselves, incurring dangers of climate, wild beasts and savage men, with no possibility of any earthly compensation, in order that they might preach Christ to the heathen? Love of Christ and concern for perishing souls, alone explain such self-sacrifice and those motives are divinely inspired. As we see such glorious work as those consecrated men have done in Africa, in the South Seas, in India, in China, in Burmah, we rejoice in the land and in the faith they have propagated. The church shares in the glory of these labors. Its gifts made it possible for them to go forth and its prayers have followed them in their work. Looking back now at those long centuries of inaction which preceded this century of missionary activity, one wonders that the command of Christ to "preach the Gospel to every creature," should have been so long neglected. It is not strange that living in such indolence the church of Christ should have declined in power and spirituality. The practical duty remains to us of atoning for that long idleness, and of seeing to it that now when men and women on all hands are offering their lives to some work, the cause shall not halt for lack of means.

A Wonderful Bible Scholar.

Many of our readers will remember our "Sunday School Contest" of last year, which extended over a period of several months. Of one of the prize winners, William Putnam, of Niles, Michigan, we have lately learned some interesting facts. The people of Niles hold him as their "memory prodigy." In 1891 he won an Oxford Bible for having committed to memory all the texts and titles of the M. E. Sunday School lessons for five years. Later, he took a prize for reciting 2,000 Scripture verses, and at the present time he has mastered 5,000 verses. He is also historically inclined and is thoroughly versed in histories, dates and events, and likewise has memorized the entire Constitution of the United States with its amendments. In our "Sunday School Contest" he won an illustrated New Testament for 14 years' unbroken attendance.

MOTIVES TO HOLINESS.

Living Well Because Saved by Grace. 1. Peter 1: 13-19.

At first sight, the reason urged by the Apostle for a holy life does not seem very cogent. The free favor of God, which is the meaning generally conveyed by the word grace, might be taken as a reason for indolence rather than as a stimulus to effort. There have been people who so regarded it. The story is told of a child at school, that noticing how well prepared another child was with her recitations, she asked the reason, and was told that she always prayed that she might succeed. She determined to adopt the same method, and that night prayed earnestly that she might acquit herself well in the recitation room; but her failure the next day was even more dismal than usual. She bemoaned the fact that God did not answer her prayers, in the same way he answered her friend's. But the reason was obvious when, in answer to her friend's questioning, she admitted that she had not studied her lessons. She had not thought it necessary to study, if she prayed; she supposed that prayer alone would insure success. There are some who expect to be saved and made holy in a similar way. The power of God does bring salvation, but it brings it to those who strive, not to those who are indolent. It is life, but it is necessary to assimilate it. It is education but, as in secular education, the child at school and the youth at college cannot be taught if he makes no effort to learn, so the Christian is not made holy by a whitewashing process, but by the means which he must employ and the power placed within his reach, which he must use. Relieved of the burden of his past sins which, like Bunyan's pilgrim, he loses at the cross, he may proceed on his upward path with joy and freedom, but he needs to be on his guard still and to relax none of his energies. In this sense God requires him to work out his own salvation, God working in him both to will and to do. He has to avoid two dangers. On the one hand, he must not suppose that God will make him proof against temptation; and on the other, that he is able to protect himself.

Free to all Readers.—The New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

As stated in the last issue the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, is proving a wonderful curative in all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disordered action of the Kidneys and urinary organs. The New York World publishes the remarkable case of Rev. A. C. Darling, minister of the gospel at North Constantia, New York, cured by Alkavis, when, as he says himself, he had lost faith in man and medicine, and was preparing himself for certain death. Similar testimony to this wonderful new remedy comes from others, including many ladies suffering from disorders peculiar to womanhood. The Church Kidney Cure Co., of No. 48 Fourth Avenue, New York, who so far are its only importers, are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free.

Do You Suffer from Asthma?

If you do, you will be interested in knowing that the Kola Plant, a new botanic discovery, found on the Congo River, West Africa, is pronounced an absolute cure for the disease. Most marvelous cures are wrought by this new plant, when all remedies fail. Rev. G. Ellsworth Stump, Pastor of the Congregational Church, Newell, Iowa, writes that the Kola Plant cured him of severe Asthma of twenty years' standing; Alfred C. Lewis, Editor of the Farmer's Magazine, of Washington, D. C., testifies that it cured him when he could not lie down at night without fear of choking, and many others give similar testimony. It is really a most wonderful discovery. To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, The Kola Importing Co., No. 1164 Broadway, New York, will send a case of the Kola Compound free by mail to any reader of The Christian Herald who suffers from any form of Asthma. They only ask in return that when cured yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. This is very fair, and you should surely try it, as it costs you nothing.

VICTORY THROUGH FAITH.

The Keeping Power of God. 1 Peter 1:5; Deut. 33:27; Isaiah 59:19.

To one who knows his own frailty and has learned by painful experience how liable he is to do the things he has resolved in his own strength not to do, there is no promise so welcome as that of God's keeping power. This does not mean that the man is to become a mere automaton, though there are many who would be willing to do that for the sake of the safety it might bring them. It means that to the man who trusts in God for the power to resist temptation and overcome the impulses of his lower nature, and who fully counts on God keeping his promise to supply that power, such help will be given as will enable him to resist evil. He must not expect to be made proof against sin, to be transformed into a being who does not feel drawn to his old evil ways, but if he steadfastly sets his face toward the right, he will find that he is helped in his struggles, that every victory gives him new power, and that grace is given him day by day as he needs it for every conflict. Looking far ahead he feels that he can never resist the temptations which have often dragged him down in the past, but he finds he can overcome the temptation nearest to him and that as he meets the next that assails him, he has power to overcome that, and so, hour by hour, the power that he requires is within his reach, if he will use it. He may still distrust himself, but he holds fast his faith in the power that is imparted and is convinced that through it he is made invincible. He may be temporarily defeated through his own lack of vigilance but to the end, he is kept, as the apostle says, "by the power of God through faith unto salvation."

The Klondike Band's Progress.

With the passing of winter, the Klondike Band of evangelists, under Capt. de Soto, is making comparatively good progress in its journey westward. In Illinois a number of very successful Gospel meetings were held among the localities visited by the band at Vandalia, Hagerstown, and Greenville. The members in the course of their travels have had some peculiar experiences. On a recent occasion they walked twenty miles in a snow storm, and were all completely worn out when shelter was reached.

Dr. Hunter's Book on Weak Lungs.

Dr Robert Hunter of New York, extracts from whose lectures on the lungs have been published in this paper from time to time, has a book on the nature, causes and cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma and Catarrh, explaining their differences, and pointing out the curative treatment of each disease.

Dr Hunter is one of the oldest Lung specialists living, having devoted his life since 1857 exclusively to the study and treatment of Lung Complaints. The first inhaling instrument ever employed for the cure of the lungs were of his invention, and the only known germicide having power to kill and expel the germs of Consumption from the lungs was discovered and successfully applied by him. His treatment by inhalations is the only scientific treatment for Lung Complaints. It brings the remedy to the very seat of the disease, the lungs, in the only common sense way. Its success is shown by hundreds of grateful patients whose lives it has saved.

Mr Edward Payson says: "I had hemorrhages, after hemorrhages, and was utterly broken down in health, coughed up yellow lumps twelve hours out of twenty-four, and night sweats, and was given up to die from which I never expected to rise again. Now I am strong and able to do my work, all good spotting and cough gone, and never sick. I have gained my health back and can say Dr Hunter's medicine is invaluable. I owe my life to this wonderful treatment and believe every one ought to know of it. All who wish to consult him call or write to his office, 117 West 45th St., New York."

Any reader of The Christian Herald who is interested can obtain the book free by addressing Dr Hunter at 117 West 45th St., New York.

MAN'S INHUMANITY.

It is unfortunate for mankind that there are men who, for the gain of money, will adulterate food intended for the human stomach. Savage blows are given to the health by harmful articles placed in food to cheapen, or add taste or color.

It is enough to raise one's ire to think that we are made to suffer temporary illness and perhaps permanent disease, brought about by adulterations in food that was purchased for pure. All "grain," "wheat" or "cereal coffees" thus far tested that have a distinct coffee taste, are concoctions made up of part low grade coffee or coffee essence and sold to people for "pure cereal coffee."

The original Postum Cereal Food Coffee is believed to be the only pure article of the kind that is palatable. The pleasant flavor of the milder grades of Java is obtained by the process of manufacture discovered by its inventor after many months of experiment.

Counterfeiters arose who found it impossible to produce a cereal coffee with the taste of Postum, and therefore have universally resorted to a mixture of low grade coffee to produce it.

True, thousands of people put one-half to two-third Postum in their coffee when unwilling to part with the narcotic effect of coffee; (this we cannot prevent) but they know what they are mixing, which is quite a different affair than to use a cereal coffee you expect to be pure, and find that the dishonest maker has put in a portion of the very article the user of cereal coffee seeks to avoid.

The great physicians, food experts, athletic trainers, lawyers, editors and brain workers in general are in large numbers using Postum Cereal Food Coffee for the benefit derived in nourishment and health. A ten days' trial will begin the work of renewal of health, and if properly prepared, so that it comes to table black, rich and delicious, it will never be abandoned.

Gramophone...

"The Greatest Contribution Made by Scien to the Entertainment of the world"...

GRAUS MOUNTAIN CHOIR OF SWITZERLAND MAKING RECORDS FOR THE GRAMOPHONE.

The Gram-o-phone is an instrument for repeating sounds previously recorded on flat, circular indestructible plates. It does not matter what sounds: They may be the magnificent tone effects of Sousa's band; or the long, silvery notes of a Cornet solo; the chastened harmonies of a Church (New York) surpliced choir, or the incongruous noises of a country farm-yard; the simple strains of some old plantation melody, or the coloratured singing of a great operatic artist; a Swiss "yodel" or a Sankey hymn; The voice of Chauncey M. Depew delivering an after-dinner speech or that of a "fakir" selling corn salve on the street.

Whatever is recorded, is reproduced, with the most astonishing fidelity to nature. Life-like distinctness of utterance, practically full tone quality, volume sufficient by actual test to fill the great Metropolitan Opera House in New York; and carrying power by which a cornet solo is heard half a mile.

Of course, none of the earlier Talking Machines have ever been able to do anything like this; and what they attempt the Gram-o-phone accomplishes; where they fail, the Gram-o-phone succeeds; what they imitate, the Gram-o-phone reproduces—and by the simplest methods: No electricity—no battery; nothing complicated; or liable to get out of order; nothing cumbersome—weight, complete, only 8 lbs including everything for Home entertainment or exhibition purposes. Anyone who can wind a clock can operate the Gram-o-phone.

Being the only method by which individuality of speech can be reproduced from indestructible plates, its value as the ONLY PERMANENT RECORD OF THE HUMAN VOICE, has been recognized by many of our best known public men, including Dwight L. Moody, Chauncey M. Depew and Joseph Jefferson, of whom highly satisfactory autographic records have been obtained.

All our later records are signed, and whether signed or not, the authenticity of every one is covered by a Thousand Dollar Guaranty. It will be seen at once that as a source of Entertainment for the Home, the Improved Gram-o-phone must be without a rival, or a parallel—as practical as a piano and more varied than all the instruments of an orchestra; for it is not only all instruments in one, with the tone characteristics of each most wonderfully preserved, but instruments as they are played by their respective masters: The Cornet by W. Paris Chambers, the celebrated virtuoso; the Trombone by Arthur Pryor, the famous soloist of Sousa's band; the Banjo by Ossman, the acknowledged banjo king, etc., etc. Besides vocal selections of the choicest kind: to say nothing of recitations, yarn telling, negro eccentricities, dialect sketches, etc., etc.,—and practically without end—for additions are made constantly to the list—no expense being spared to keep the repertoire up to date.

Even in New York City, where there is no lack of other entertainment, the Gram-o-phone is used by many of the most wealthy and refined families—for it brings within their homes, and places at their instant disposal, a variety of diversion such as no single place of amusement in the world can furnish.

And what it does for them, it will do just as well for you. Here, for instance, is one of a hundred programs:

PROGRAMME

1. El Capitan March - - - Sousa's Band
2. The Holy City - - - - A. Campbell
3. Love Thoughts Waltz—Trombone Solo - Arthur Pryor, Trombone Soloist of Sousa's Band.
4. Little Darling, Dream of Me.
5. The Diamond Four.—Well sung by a male quartette
6. The Seraph - - - - W. Paris Chambers Cornet solo by this great artist.
7. Yield Not to Temptation - - Stephen Porter One of the good old-time hymns.
8. Imitation of a Street Faker - Geo. Graham
9. Marriage Bells - - - - Tess L. Ossman Wonderful banjo record by America's greatest banjoist
10. Kaiser March - - - - Bande The most famous band of Italy.
11. A Talk - - - - By Happy Cal
12. Old Black Joe - - - - Chas. I Xylophone Solo.
13. Nancy Brown - - - - Dan W. Chorus of Boys and Girls.
14. Las Alsacienness - - A. P. Sidler Clarionet soloist of Sousa's Band.
15. Melba Waltz - - - - Helen Most wonderful soprano record ever made
16. I'se Gwine Back to Dixie - Geo. J.

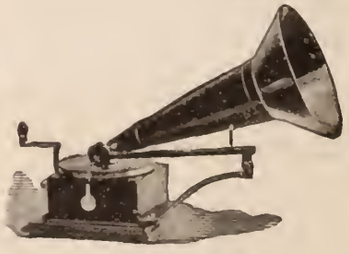
These selections could be given at home—for the family, or at a social party; or in a hall, for admission fee. Many are making money pleasantly and easily with the Gram-o-phone.



The Interior. "No matter where you live the Gram-o-phone) places your ear to the key-hole of the world's amusement world, affording a limitless variety of entertainment to be obtained in no other way, with so little trouble and expense."

The Ram's Horn. "The Gram-o-phone) certainly brings within the protecting confines of the family circle many of the most popular amusements of the day without their ordinary expense—to say nothing of their possible danger."

The Churchman. "In the way of entertainment for the Home, the Social Circle and the Neighborhood the inventive genius of the Nineteenth Century has produced nothing so wonderful, so practical, and in all respects so satisfactory as the Gram-o-phone)"

VOMAN IN AFRICA.

FROM Dr. W. T. Currie, of Cisamba, some encouraging reports of tours he has made among the tribes around his station. In describing these people in a letter to the Missionary Herald, Dr. Currie thus refers to the duties the women are required to perform: "The Bihean women rise about two in the morning to pound their corn, and when they finish it in time, go to bed and sleep till about six, when they go to the fields, often making mush before they start, for themselves and families. After working till about midday they return to their homes with food and fuel for the evening meal, which is prepared about dusk. The men, when at home, keep a measure with the field work; never allow that to interfere with their starting on a journey, for the field work is regarded as peculiarly a woman's calling. The Valumbi women rise about six, cook their corn, and cook a good substantial meal, after which they start to the fields about nine o'clock. The men work with them and can scarcely be induced to select that work during the time of digging and planting. All—even the children when at liberty—work in the field until midday, when many of the men go to the river to catch fish, the rest remaining in the field work until about five o'clock, when all return to their villages, bearing food and fuel. They are traders only in a very limited degree, and yet they seem not to be behind the Biheans in courage.

"We hope to translate a number of hymns into their language and collect a vocabulary for use by the native evangelists; and, indeed, Mrs. Currie has already made a slight beginning in this matter. The men frequently come to the station to make small sales or purchases, and engage as carriers. A number of these have made friends with some of the young people, so that they come to visit and spend days with us. We hope to take advantage of these facts to collect more vocabulary and prepare for more systematic work among the people."

BRIGHT'S DISEASE

A Patient of 74 Years Rescued from Imminent Death by

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

A case stated by Dr. E. C. Laird,

Member of the North Carolina Medical Society, Member American Medical Association, and formerly Resident Physician at the Springs:

"Mr.——, age 74, arrived at BUFFALO LITHIA SPRINGS in an exceedingly prostrate condition, exhibiting unmistakable symptoms of Bright's Disease, viz.: puffiness of the face, eyes suffused, impaired vision, breathing labored and distressed, heart involved, inability to take a recumbent position for any length of time, feet and legs so swollen that he could not wear his shoes, and Uraemic poison to such an extent that he was generally asleep when sitting in his chair. Examination of the Urine the day after his arrival, both chemical and microscopical, showed the presence of albumen, tube-casts, and epithelium, confirming the diagnosis of Bright's Disease. This situation, especially in view of his advanced years, seemed to preclude the possibility of benefit from any remedy. He was put, however, upon the water of spring No. 2, which, to my equal surprise and gratification, proved promptly and highly beneficial, and to such an extent that he rested comfortably in bed, which he had not been able to do for several months previous. His improvement, excepting an intermission at one time of a few days, was continuous and steady during a stay of twelve weeks at the Springs, and so rapid that when he left, not only had all symptoms of his trouble entirely disappeared, but he had gained largely in flesh, and possessed a healthful vigor by no means common to men of his years."

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is for sale by Grocers and Druggists generally. Pamphlets on application.

Missionaries Mobbed in China.

Christian hearts have been saddened by a report from Shanghai that the American Medical Mission in the suburbs of Chung-King-Fu on the Yang-tse-Kiang has suffered from the onslaught of a native mob, that native medical assistants have been maltreated, and that one has been murdered. Especially is sorrow and anxiety keen in those circles which, keeping in close touch with missionary life, are ever acutely alive to its continual dangers and privations. Full details of the tragedy have not yet been received. The neighborhood in which the trouble occurred has been fruitful of peril to missionaries. Previous to the establishment of Protestant medical missions, Roman Catholics had suffered at the hands of natives, who insisted that foreigners should not be permitted to relieve suffering. Late last year, it will be remembered, Dr. F. M. Woolsey, of the Methodist Medical Mission, while ministering to the sick, was set upon and stoned by an uproarious and hilarious mob of the student military class. He was seriously injured, and the case was put into the hands of the American consul and some of the malefactors received punishment.

Prohibition In Canada.

Temperance workers and Christians everywhere will watch with interest the result of the Canadian ballot on the subject of prohibition of the liquor traffic in the Dominion. An ingenious device of the opposing faction was shown in the proposal that the question be printed on each ballot as to whether the voter would prefer a direct tax to take the place of revenue derived indirectly through the liquor traffic. The prohibitionists suggested that if this were done, the ballot should ask the voter if he were in favor of or opposed to the ruin of near kindred or dear friends in the saloon. This would have put the issue squarely before the voters.

MEDICINE AND ADVICE FREE.

SEND IN YOUR APPLICATION.

There are a great many people in this world who are coughing, hawking and spitting themselves into their graves.

Are you one of them?

It is by some considered FASHIONABLE to be sick; but when the sickness has run its course and the end of life is near—IS IT FASHIONABLE THEN?

"Hope springs eternal in the human breast."

But hope may be too strong.

You may hope that your cough is nothing very serious, that your catarrh will go when the warm weather comes, that consumption will spare you when it strikes others.

What is a good name for such "hopefulness"? Carelessness? Thoughtlessness? Foolhardiness?

It is better to KNOW than to HOPE.

You can only know that you are SAFE when you are perfectly WELL and free from sickness.

You can easily learn the way to be well, if you wish it. It is the system of an eminent scientist whose advice you can obtain free and who is giving to those who need it free medicine to alleviate their sufferings.

Learn to be well that life may be worth living, for disease is one of Nature's ponishments to those who persist in remaining ignorant of her ways and rules.

Your blood draws its life from the oxygen it gets in your lungs. When sick lungs cut off the supply your bodies waste away for lack of nourishment. This is consumption.

The germ that fastens on weak lungs and eats them up is the consumption germ.

The lung is made easy for its attack by colds, coughs, catarrhs, and similar troubles.

Slocum's System, which drives all these diseases out of the body, builds the lungs, kills the germs, creates new, natural, visible LIFE in your worn-out body,—regenerates you completely, and gives your system a NEW LEASE of life in a COMFORTABLE BODY;—this system, which all doctors, chemists and scientists are talking about, is one of the most valuable discoveries of the times.

It is a result of the investigation of Koch, Pasteur, Virchow, Metchnikoff—a reduction of all the various theoretical suggestions of these eminent men, by an equally eminent man, to PRACTICE.

The Slocum System is fully explained and exemplified in a new pamphlet just off the press, which should be read by every thinking person.

Sent to you on application, with Three Free Bottles of the Doctor's New Discoveries which have revolutionized the theory and practice of medicine.

To obtain these valuable preparations, mention The Christian Herald your name and full address to The Dr. Slocum Laboratory, Slocum Building, New York City, when they will be sent you on the simple condition that you employ them for the relief of suffering and do not write out of idle coriosity.

THE POINT OF VIEW.

...ha S. Lippincott, the Quaker Poetess.

His world is as we make it,
I often hear them say;
we are sad and tearful.
The world will seem that way;
d if we seek the dark side,
Where everything goes wrong,
d see mole hills as mountains,
Our lives will seem too long.

: if we seek life's sunshine,
sweet joy to others give,
d daily climb life's mountains,
s though we're glad to live;
vercome disaster,
And sunshine round us shower.
make o r dear friends happy,
Then j y will be our dower.

e world is but a mirror,
eflecting each one's mind.
we look at it crossly,
To us 'twill not look kind;
t if we smile upon it.
t will be joyous, too.
matter how we see it.
Twill give us our own view.
when the world seems dreary,
And life seems bitter, too, t ask your disposition
t it can better do;
d, if it turns to sunshine,
The world will look so bright at you will be forgetting
How dark has been the night.

Burpee's PINK Cupid.

This little wonder grows only six to eight inches high, with dark, emerald-green foliage. The plant spreads from a foot to eighteen inches around, and sends up numerous strong stems, each bearing in full bloom at once from three to four handsome flowers, close to the end.

The standard is a bright rose-pink, while the wings are pure white or light pink, very large and finely formed.

The plant itself is vigorous and hardy, and those who had poor or indifferent success with White Cupid will find Burpee's PINK Cupid easy to grow anywhere. The seed is black, of wonderfully strong germination, and needs no special care in planting.

Though flowering early, it continues in bloom very late, bearing a profusion of large flowers so thickly as to completely hide the plant itself. It has no rival as a bedding and border annual, for its color and fragrance make it a rare novelty. A large bed looks as if the ground were literally strewn with bright-pink rosebuds. No novelty has such beauty and grace combined as has Burpee's PINK Cupid. It is also delightfully fragrant, and will be admired by every one who sees it.

In regular-size packets (each containing twenty-four seeds): Per pkt. 25 cts.; 5 pkts. for $1.00; per dozen pkts. $2.00, postpaid. In half-size packets (each containing twelve seeds): Per pkt. 15 cts.; 2 pkts. for 25 cts.; or 10 pkts. for $1.00, postpaid.

Back from Scenes of Suffering

Dr. Klopsch Tells His Experiences in Cuba—President McKinley and His Advisers Deeply Interested in the Relief Work Among the Reconcentrados—The Present Condition of the Work and its Immediate Needs.

ON his return from Cuba, whither he went to personally supervise the relief work among the starving reconcentrados and to arrange for extension, Dr. Louis Klopsch, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, has prepared the following report of his tour, which will be read with deep interest by all who have had a part in this life-saving mission:

After a month's absence in Cuba, on returning home, I visited Washington, and reported to Hon. Mr. Adee, Second Assistant Secretary of State, briefly the condition of the American relief work on that unhappy island. After listening to me a few minutes, Mr. Adee suggested that I see Judge Day, First Assistant Secretary of State, which I did. Judge Day heard me with close attention and manifested great interest in the work. In the course of the interview, he asked:

"'Dr. Klopsch, how would these reconcentrados be affected in case war should be declared?'

"I then told him that in case the ports of Cuba should be closed against us, the Spanish military would, of course, appropriate the stores on hand, and the reconcentrados must inevitably perish, as even at the present time, with ports open, they were no further than eight or ten days removed from death by sheer starvation.

"Judge Day, at the conclusion of our talk, asked me to return in half an hour, when I was summoned to the White House and introduced to the President. Members of the Cabinet, and several Senators of the United States. To these gentlemen I repeated what I had already said to Judge Day, and replied to various inquiries bearing on the situation in Cuba, but giving no expression to any political views which I personally may have entertained, but simply reflecting the opinions of prominent Cubans in Havana whom I had met there.

"All the gentlemen present seemed particularly interested in the present status of the relief work, and in the quantities of supplies now in the store-houses, and also

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Elsie B., Brooklyn, N. Y. Can you reconcile the statement in Genesis 22:1, that "God did tempt Abraham" with the assertion of James (1:13), "Neither tempteth he any man"?

The contradiction is on the surface only. The word, tempt, as used in Genesis, means simply a test or trial. In the Revised Version it is rendered, "prove," which expresses the meaning more accurately. In James, the word conveys the idea of suggesting evil, of laying a trap, which no one can conceive of God doing.

Subscriber, Marshall, Mich. 1. Will you give further explanation about Jephthah's daughter? There seems to me no connection between the passage you quote from Leviticus and the case of this girl. 2. What authority have you for supposing that Jephthah was a judge?

1. The connection is simply in the provision for vows of the same kind as Jephthah's. When a man had consecrated anything, like his field or his house, to God, and wished to redeem it, he could do so by a payment of money. Similarly, if it was a person, his son or daughter, he could make the same substitution. Leviticus 27 fixes the rate. For a girl under five years old it was three shekels (see verse 6); over five and under twenty, ten shekels (see verse 5). If Jephthah knew of this arrangement we would expect that he would avail himself of it, for he was evidently reluctant to kill his daughter. 2. The direct statement (Judges 12:7) that he "judged Israel six years."

M. L. J., Waterbury, Conn. How can you prove by Scripture that there is no chance for repentance after death?

It cannot be absolutely proved, but the trend of Bible teaching is in that direction. The passage Eccles 11:3, "If the tree fall toward the north," etc., is often quoted in proof, but the inference is not decisive. So also is Rev. 22:11, "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still," etc., which is more to the purpose, but not absolute proof. Another passage implying the hopelessness of the lost is Luke 16:26, "Between us and you there is a great gulf fixed, so that they which would pass from hence to you, cannot," etc. The burden of proof, however, seems to be on those who contend that there is opportunity of repentance after death. Where there are such momentous issues at stake, a man had need have very positive assurance of there being the opportunity before he decides to run the risk, and he does not appear to us to have any ground at all.

J. L., Olivet, Canada. Was the Lord's Prayer written only to be used in the Apostles' days, or was it written to be used in the churches?

The Lord's Prayer is not believed to have been designed as a formula of Christian prayer in general and was never so cited by the Apostles themselves, although Jerome states that it was used by them on sacramental occasions. It is the earliest liturgical formula in actual use, and the early fathers enjoined its regular use but solely by baptized persons. Its universal applicability is recognized in the fact that in all liturgies it occupies a prominent place, and is recited in service by many denominations.

I. C. M., Carrington, N. D.; R. L. E., New York, and others. Does not Isaiah in his fifty eighth chapter teach the duty of observing the seventh day as the Sabbath? Has the command to observe the seventh day ever been repealed?

To our mind the chapter seems to teach exactly opposite. It was a reproof to the formalists who were more careful about the letter than the spirit. The fasts and observances on which they prided themselves were an offence to God while they were not fulfilling the law in the spirit. It was righteousness and deeds of kindness and mercy that God required of his people, not the minute literal observances which were easy to render. The command to observe the seventh day has not been repealed so far as we know, nor has the command to observe the Passover, nor the law of circumcision. We keep the spirit of the command in consecrating a seventh portion of our time and at the same time we celebrate the resurrection of Christ which to us is a much more important reason for holding a day sacred than the reason given in Exodus 20 for observing the seventh day. The very question of longitude precludes the possibility of uniform observance. If you travel westward around the world and observe the natural days, you would find yourself at the end of the first voyage observing Saturday as Sunday and at the end of a second voyage observing Friday and so on unless you dropped a day in each instance to bring yourself in line with the rest of the world. The people who think they are pleasing God by going back to the seventh day observance make the mistake of conceiving of him as having a mind as small as the human mind, which is far too apt to attach importance to trivialities.

C. C. E., Colo. Ia. What kind of death did Herodias and her daughter die?

Josephus in Antiquities, Book 18, chapter 5, refers to the closing career of Herodias. She went with Antipas to Lugdunum and there shared his exile and reverses until death ended them.

Old Subscriber, Oakes, N. D. Ought a man, who has been converted, to pay a saloon-keeper an old standing debt for whiskey, etc.?

We do not see how he can in honor refuse to pay. Of course, if the saloon-keeper agreed to remit the whole or any portion of the debt, that would release him, but we apprehend there is not much prospect of his doing so. As he had the goods, which cost the saloon-keeper money, he should pay, just as much as he would have to pay a druggist if he had bought poison from him. It is one of the penalties of a bad life that the consequences go on, but in this case there is the great consolation that the account is not increasing, as it might be if the man had not been converted.

The passage as quoted does not occur in the Bible. You doubtless have in mind Isa. 46:4.

In which inaugural address did Lincoln say: "With charity to all and malice toward none"?

1. Rivers, in obedience to the law of gravitation, always move from a higher to a lower level, and therefore toward the sea, which is at a lower level than the land. Sometimes rivers do not get to the sea, but evaporate, or are lost in swamps, or sink into cavities of the earth. 2. They could be as far apart as the North and South Pole. Frozen Lapland, in the north of Europe, is in the same parallel of longitude as the greater part of Cape Colony in South Africa. 3. Ninety. 4. The Vice-President presides over the Senate, and can vote in case of a tie. He is not obliged to vote, however. 5. Because it was originally composed of sovereign States, which united in a federation known as the United States, and is therefore a federal government, as distinguished from the government of a nation composed only of one State, such as France, or Spain, or Italy. 6. In his second inaugural address, March 4, 1865, Abraham Lincoln said: "With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphan — to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations."

J. H., Watertown, Conn. When and by whom was Arbor Day originated?

It originated with Hon. J. Sterling Morton, who, in 1872, offered before the Nebraska State Board of Agriculture, of which he was a member, a resolution making April 10, tree-planting day in that State. Since then, many States have adopted this institution, which was first celebrated in Nebraska at the instance of Mr. Morton, who became under President Cleveland's second term, Secretary of Agriculture.

E. H. Grosty, Clarkson, Culpepper Co., Va., writes:

It is just one month to-day since my request for castaway Sunday School lessons appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. That request has been most heartily responded to by the Master's servants in all parts of this great country of ours. Letters, Sunday School lessons and religious papers have been sent from Washington, Oregon, California, Colorado, Montana, North Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, Tennessee, North Carolina, Georgia, Virginia, West Virginia, District of Columbia, Maryland, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, Rhode Island, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Michigan, Iowa, and others. I am very thankful to all the good people who have so heartily answered that Macedonian call. The religious reading of various kinds sent, are real, acceptable helps to us. These are what we prayed for, and why not have faith in prayer? The papers supply three Sunday Schools, and afterwards we send these precious truths, around to families, white and colored, and feel sure that they are doing much good. I have answered forty-five letters and have nearly that many more to be answered. If I were able to leave off work and spare the money I would be delighted to write to everyone who names the name of Jesus.

G. T. W., Lanyville, Pa. Why are there so many American Consuls in Cuba? I have heard of three consuls there besides General Lee, and supposed but one was sent to a foreign country.

It is customary with all governments to have a consul at every port of entry in foreign countries. This explains the fact that there are a number of consuls in Cuba under the supervision of Consul-General Lee at Havana.

F. A. G., Baltimore, Md., writes:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of March 23, says: "Under the persecutions of the Emperor Nero, Paul and Peter were both murdered in Rome. Paul was beheaded and Peter was crucified." The earliest witness to the martyrdom of Peter at Rome is Dionysius, A. D. 170, over 100 years after the event. Shepherd's History of the Church at Rome regards this extract as a forgery. The testimony of Zephyrinus, A. D. 215, can hardly be accepted owing to the great distance of time which had elapsed. We find no contemporary writer saying that Peter was ever in Rome. No Father relates this fable till A. D. 300. We find no contemporary witness saying St. Peter was at Rome and no witness near that period asserting it, until several generations after his death did it begin to be said. The chain of testimony fails for want of connecting links between the first witnesses and the facts alleged.

T. R. L., New Haven, Conn. What potentate besides the pope has his toe kissed?

The Sultan of Turkey. In the case of the pope, the cross on the slipper (not the toe) is kissed. In the case of the Sultan, it is the naked toe, and only high officials are admitted to such a privilege.

Mrs. Catharine G., Virginia, Neb. 1. What number of people live in Cuba? 2. How many verses must I read a day to read the Bible through in a year?

1. Native and half-breed Spaniards, negroes, and half-breed Cubans, negroes, and a small number of Europeans and American citizens. 2. Eighty-six verses a day.

A. H. G., Harrisburg, Pa. Under the present settled and strained relations between the United States and Spain, have we any certainty that contributions to your Cuban fund reach the famine sufferers?

There is not the slightest doubt about it. Dr. Klopsch, who has been in Cuba personally organizing the work, in co-operation with Gen. Lee and our United States consuls throughout the island, has so arranged matters that every centre of suffering is reached. The alcaldes or mayors, under the newly-reformed regime, are nearly all Cubans and also are the local relief committees. Gen. Lee is the head of the entire Distributory Board.

F. O. R., Dwight, Kan. As I have seen a good many questions answered in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I would like to ask one. I am striving to be a Christian, but have one sin which is hard to conquer. I have prayed and asked the Lord to help me, but when the temptation comes I have to let have its way. Sometimes I think that I had better give it up and not try and be a Christian for I sin more by it than I was far away?

You cannot accomplish by your own strength, that is your desire. To conquer your besetting sin you must ask strength in his name, who promised to succor us in the hour of temptation. If you ask in fully trusting, and go forward confidence, relying upon the promise, he will not fail you. At the same time do not court temptation, but remove yourself as far as possible from the cause which induce you to fall. When the temptation comes you are ask in Jesus' name for strength to overcome it. Your struggle will be made less difficult to you and you will soon discover that the true source of strength to resist evil is not in man's will but in God alone.

MR. SANKEY SINGING ON "DAVID'S TOWER," JERUSALEM

Sging On David's Tower.

Mr. Sankey's Hymn of Praise On the Ancient Citadel in Jerusalem—The Two Calvaries—Notes of Missionary Progress.

FROM Mr. Ira D. Sankey, the famous singing evangelist, now in the East, we have received two more letters, which our readers will read with real pleasure. Mr. Sankey writes:

"JERUSALEM, March 3, 1898.

"We have finished our sight-seeing in and about Jerusalem, and are just starting for Beyrout, Smyrna, and Athens. We have visited all of the places of special interest, but nothing has impressed us so much as the long and weary road among the Judean hills, leading from Jericho to Jerusalem. Over this road Jesus traveled on his way to Calvary, to die for the sins of the world. There is but the one road. As we looked upon the same hills on which he must have looked as he climbed the rough and stony road long ago.

"We have visited both the old and the new Calvaries—the former located on the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, within the present walls of Jerusalem, and the latter are only about 400 years old, the latter located outside of the city wall, on a place called 'Green hill,' not far from the Damascus Gate. It is now spoken of as the new, or 'Gordon's Calvary,' in memory of Gen. Gordon, the hero of Khartoum. He visited the city, and after careful study pronounced it as his opinion that the green hill outside the walls was the real Calvary. We found many Christians who were of the same opinion; but it will, we believe, ever remain an unsettled question.

"After considerable difficulty we obtained permission from the Turkish soldiers, who are quartered in the citadel, to ascend to the top of the Tower of David, one of the highest points in the city. While there, far above the rush and turmoil of the crowded thoroughfare, called 'David street,' we sang a verse of one of the beautiful psalms:

I to the hills will lift mine eyes,
From whence doth come mine aid;
My safety cometh from the Lord,
Who heaven and earth hath made.

"We have also had the pleasure of singing at a number of schools and at some meetings conducted by a deputation of ministers from the last Keswick Convention, sent here to hold services for the quickening of spiritual life among the missionaries and Christian workers of Jerusalem. Much good work is being done in schools and mission halls, but there is still room for many more consecrated workers.

"We had the pleasure of greeting our new Ambassador to Turkey, Rev. Mr. Angell, on his arrival here yesterday. He will make a popular Minister.

"IRA D. SANKEY."

WEEK IN THE TURKISH CAPITAL.

"CONSTANTINOPLE, March 15.

"We have now spent a week in Constantinople and are about leaving for Athens. We have found this to be one of the most beautiful cities of the world in situation. It is built upon seven hills, with the blue waters of the Bosphorus washing their shores. We have visited the scenes of the fearful massacres in the city in which, it is said, from 6,000 to 7,000 Armenians were killed. We believe the day of reckoning is coming, and it will be by the overruling hand of God, who alone is able to bring light out of darkness and concord out of chaos.

"We have had the pleasure of visiting a number of American schools, that are doing a great deal more to help this country than all the gunboats and armed soldiers in and about Constantinople. At the head of them all stands Robert College, occupying one of the most beautiful spots on the Bosphorus, a little way out of the city. We attended divine service there on last Sabbath, together with our new United States Consul, Mr. C. M. Dickinson, and received a cordial welcome from the students, most of whom are known to us through the medium of the "Gospel Hymns." So far as I could learn, every one here speaks well of this college and the other American schools. It is said that the present Sultan, whom we saw on last Friday, seeing the success, in a business way, of the young men of this country who have graduated from these institutions of learning, has organized and set in motion more Mohammedan schools than all his predecessors in the Ottoman caliphate put together.

"Next in importance is the American College for Girls, which we visited to-day. It is located on the heights of Scutari, overlooking the Bosphorus and the beautiful Sea of Marmora. We had but an hour at this college, but still had time to say a word and sing "Saved by Grace," and "The Ninety and Nine," in the College hall.

"One of the most interesting of all the schools which we visited was one for smaller children, both Greeks and Armenians, located in Stambouhl, and carried on by the American Board, under the direction of Mrs. Marden and several other American ladies. We were greatly pleased with the manner in which these children sang "Beneath the Cross of Jesus," "A Shelter in the Time of Storm," and "The Ninety and Nine," in Arabic. We hear the missionaries spoken of in the highest terms, not only by the English-speaking people, but by the better class of the natives. The only hope for law and order, justice and peace, in this land is by Christian education.

"We hope to spend Easter in Rome.

"IRA D. SANKEY."

THE WHITE ROSE MISSION.

It is Doing a Grand Gospel Work Among Afro-Americans in New York.

IN the great metropolis, many missions and institutions have been organized to touch the people, to improve their condition, and bring spiritual life to the white race and the mixed foreign element, but as yet little has been done to elevate and teach the Afro-American youth of the over-crowded upper East-side of New York, where these children run wild and swarm the streets. Between 59th and 127th streets, and from Park avenue to First avenue, there are about six thousand colored people, who have mostly been driven away from Bleecker street by the influx of Italians. They have found it necessary to colonize in spots, because of the bitter local prejudice. The landlords agree that the colored race are peaceable and more cleanly than some others; they are religious and very fond of music, which is a safeguard.

Until within the last year, there has been no place within the whole territory of New York City really open to black women, men, or boys and girls, where they could spend an evening under moral and uplifting influences, similar to those provided for other people of parallel moral condition. The churches near them are too poor to sustain more than Sabbath services and a weekly prayer-meeting. The places of amusement are open every night, provided by vice and sin, enticing the youthful and unwary colored boy and girl and leading them astray from the paths of virtue. Hence the need of greater activity and benevolence in preparing a place to save them from a lifetime of sorrow, sin and shame.

WORKERS AT THE WHITE ROSE MISSION—THE MISSION COOKING SCHOOL.

About a year ago, the White Rose Mission, 234 East 97th street, was commenced providentially by Mrs. Virginia Earle Matthews, who is a very intelligent Christian and an Afro-American. Sorrow in the loss of a dearly loved son, led her to consecrate her life to the work of benefiting and saving her own race. She is very remarkable in her sympathy and power of getting hold of the hearts of the young. The White Rose Mission is endorsed by Mrs. Lucy Bainbridge, Superintendent of the Woman's Branch of New York City Missions; but this society has no jurisdiction above 14th street and cannot aid the work. The result of a year's effort has more than fulfilled the expectation of the workers.

The Mission receives no support from any church or society, but depends upon the voluntary contributions of those whose hearts God has touched. The average colored family is very poor. Only those who have struggled through the dark days of the White Rose Mission know how much sacrifice has been made by the volunteer workers. At no time have they called upon the public to help them, but have been content to demonstrate the possibilities of good through this agency. They have rented a few small rooms in which are held weekly meetings for mothers; a Girls' Sewing Class, at which girls are taught dressmaking and plain sewing; a Cooking School, where on Wednesday afternoon, thirty-seven children in their white caps and aprons gather together to receive instruction in cooking. Many of the mothers of these girls work out during the day, and they are left to take care of the little ones and to prepare their food. How important that they should know the best kind of preparation! There is a class for fathers and young men; a Singing Class for children, led by an Afro-American girl, and a Kindergarten on Saturday afternoon of one hundred and fourteen children. Miss Grace Dodge, realizing the need of training and systematic teaching, has educated a young colored girl at the Teachers' College, and she now instructs these children.

Mrs. Matthews, who has charge of the Mothers' Meeting on Thursday afternoon, is thoroughly competent to instruct the women in the care of their children. She encourages them to read on the subject, and enforces the spiritual life and need of discipline. An organ has been presented to the White Rose Mission by a lady in our city, who felt led of the Lord to give it as a memorial of her mother, who has passed into the skies. The workers all feel that everything has come to them in answer to prayer and faith. They give their time and diligence in service, and trust God to provide the necessaries, build, direct and complete his work. At present they need a large building for the Industrial Training School or Home, in which they could use the upper part for women or girls out of service and seeking work, and where they could be lodged for a mere nominal cost. The lower part of the building would be readily used for the classes, gymnasium and reading-room.

VIRGINIA EARLE MATTHEWS.

The work is wholly undenominational, and is sustained by voluntary contributions and workers. Benevolent men and women could not do better than "Lend a Hand" and help in this most worthy cause "The White Rose" in the "Hollow." Any communication concerning the work may be addressed to Mrs. Lucy Bainbridge, Superintendent of the Woman's Branch of New York City Missions, United Charities Building, 105 East 22d street, New York. This work has been heartily endorsed by the united ministry of New York City, and a service is held on Sunday afternoons at three o'clock for Bible study, by Rev. H. G. Miller. Mr. Booker T. Washington, of Industrial Tuskegee fame, has also cordially approved the work.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

The Law of Self-Sacrifice

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Heb. 9: 22, ... } Without shedding of blood is no remission.

JOHN G. WHITTIER, the last of the great school of American poets that made the last quarter of this century brilliant, asked me in the White Mountains, one morning after prayers, in which I had given out Cowper's famous hymn about "The Fountain Filled with Blood," "Do you really believe there is a literal application of the blood of Christ to the soul?" My negative reply then is my negative reply now. The Bible statement agrees with all physicians, and all physiologists, and all scientists, in saying that the blood is the life, and in the Christian religion it means simply that Christ's life was given for our life. Hence all this talk of men who say the Bible story of blood is disgusting, and that they don't want what they call a "slaughter-house religion," only shows their incapacity or unwillingness to look through the figure of speech toward the thing signified. The blood that, on the darkest Friday the world ever saw, oozed, or trickled, or poured from the brow, and the side, and the hands, and the feet of the Illustrious Sufferer, back of Jerusalem, in a few hours coagulated and dried up, and forever disappeared: and if man had depended on the application of the literal blood of Christ, there would not have been a soul saved for the last eighteen centuries.

In order to understand this red word of my text, we only have to exercise as much common sense in religion as we do in everything else. Pang for pang, hunger for hunger, fatigue for fatigue, tear for tear, blood for blood, life for life, we see every day illustrated. The act of substitution is no novelty, although I hear men talk as though the idea of Christ's suffering substituted for our suffering were something abnormal, something distressingly odd, something wildly eccentric, a solitary episode in the world's history; when I could take you out into this city and before sundown point you to five hundred cases of substitution and voluntary suffering of one in behalf of another.

At two o'clock to-morrow afternoon go among the places of business or toil. It will be no difficult thing for you to find men who, by their looks, show you that they are overworked. They are prematurely old. They are hastening rapidly toward their decease. They have gone through crises in business that shattered their nervous system, and pulled on the brain. They have a shortness of breath, and a pain in the back of the head, and at night an insomnia that alarms them. Why are they drudging at business early and late? For fun? No, it would be difficult to extract any amusement out of that exhaustion. Because they are avaricious? In many cases no. Because their own personal expenses are lavish? No: a few hundred dollars would meet all their wants. The simple fact is, the man is enduring all that fatigue and exasperation, and wear and tear, to keep his home prosperous. There is an invisible line reaching from that store, from that bank, from that shop, from that scaffolding, to a quiet scene a few blocks, a few miles away, and there is the secret of that business endurance. He is simply the champion of a homestead, for which he wins bread, and wardrobe, and education, and prosperity, and in such battle ten thousand men fall. Of ten business men whom I bury, nine die of overwork for others. Some sudden disease finds them with no power of resistance, and they are gone. Life for life. Blood for blood. Substitution!

At one o'clock to-morrow morning, the hour when slumber is most uninterrupted and profound, walk amid the dwelling-houses of the city. Here and there you will find a dim light, because it is the household custom to keep a subdued light burning: but most of the houses from base to top are as dark as though uninhabited. A merciful God has sent forth the archangel of sleep, and he puts his wings over the city. But yonder is a clear light burning, and outside on a window casement a glass or pitcher containing food for a sick child; the food is set in the fresh air. This is the sixth night that mother has sat up with that sufferer. She has to the last point obeyed the physician's prescription, not giving a drop too much or too little, or a moment too soon or too late. She is very anxious, for she has buried three children with the same disease, and she prays and weeps, each prayer and sob ending with a kiss of the pale cheek. By dint of kindness she gets the little one through the ordeal. After it is all over, the mother is taken down. Brain or nervous fever sets in, and one day she leaves the convalescent child with a mother's blessing, and goes up to join the three departed ones in the kingdom of heaven. Life for life. Substitution! The fact is that there are an uncounted number of mothers who, after they have navigated a large family of children through all the diseases of infancy, and got them fairly started up the flowering slope of boyhood and girlhood, have only strength enough left to die. They fade away. Some call it consumption; some call it nervous prostration; some call it intermittent or malarial indisposition; but I call it martyrdom of the domestic circle. Life for life. Blood for blood. Substitution!

Or perhaps a mother lingers long enough to see a son get on the wrong road, and his former kindness becomes rough reply when she expresses anxiety about him. But she goes right on, looking carefully after his apparel, remembering his every birthday with some memento, and when he is brought home worn out with dissipation, nurses him till he gets well and starts him again, and hopes, and expects, and prays, and counsels, and suffers, until her strength gives out and she fails. She is going, and attendants, bending over her pillow, ask her if she has any message to leave, and she makes great effort to say something, but out of three or four minutes of indistinct utterance they can catch but three words: "My poor boy!" The simple fact is she died for him. Life for life. Substitution!

About thirty-eight years ago there went forth from our Northern and Southern homes hundreds of thousands of men to do battle. All the poetry of war soon vanished, and left them nothing but the terrible prose. They waded knee-deep in mud. They slept in snow-banks. They marched till their cut feet tracked the earth. They were swindled out of their honest rations, and lived on meat not fit for a dog. They had jaws fractured, and eyes extinguished, and limbs shot away. Thousands of them cried for water as they lay on the field the night after the battle and got it not. They were homesick, and received no message from their loved ones. They died in barns, in bushes, in ditches, the buzzards of the summer heat the only attendants on their obsequies. No one but the infinite God who knows everything, knows the ten-thousandth part of the length, and breadth, and depth, and height of anguish of the Northern and Southern battlefields. Why did these fathers leave their children and go to the front, and why did these young men, postponing the marriage-day, start out into the probabilities of never coming back? For a principle they died. Life for Life. Blood for blood. Substitution!

But we need not go so far. What is that monument in the cemetery? It is to the doctors who fell in the Southern epidemics. Why go? Were there not enough sick to be attended in these Northern latitudes? Oh, yes; but the doctor puts a few medical books in his valise, and some vials of medicine, and leaves his patients here in the hands of other physicians, and takes the rail train. Before he gets to the infected regions he passes crowded rail-trains, regular and extra, taking the flying and affrighted populations. He arrives in a city over which a great horror is brooding. He goes from couch to couch, feeling the pulse and studying symptoms, and prescribing day after day, night after night, until a fellow-physician says: "Doctor, you had better go home and rest; you look miserable." But he can not rest while so many are suffering. On and on, until some morning finds him in a delirium, in which he talks of home, and then rises and says he must go and look after those patients. He is told to lie down; but he fights his attendants until he falls back, and is weaker and weaker, and dies for people with whom he had no kinship, and far away from his own family, and is hastily put away in a stranger's tomb, and only the fifth part of a newspaper line tells us of his sacrifice—his name just mentioned among five. Yet he has touched the furthest height of sublimity in that three weeks of humanitarian service. He goes straight as an arrow to the bosom of him who said: "I was sick and ye visited me." Life for life. Blood for blood. Substitution!

In the legal profession I see the same principle of self-sacrifice. In 1846, William Freeman, a pauperized and idiotic negro, was at Auburn, N. Y., on trial for murder. He had slain the entire Van Nest family. The foaming wrath of the community could be kept off him only by armed constables. Who would volunteer to be his counsel? No attorney wanted to sacrifice his popularity by such an ungrateful task. All were silent save one, a young lawyer with feeble voice, that could hardly be heard outside the bar, pale and thin and awkward. It was William H. Seward, who saw that the prisoner was idiotic and irresponsible, and ought to be put in an asylum, rather than put to death.

The gallows got its victim, but the post-mortem examination of the poor creature showed to all the surgeons and to all the world that the public were wrong, and William H. Seward was right, and that hard, stony step of obloquy in the Auburn court-room was the first step of the stairs of fame up which he went to the top, or to within one step of the top, that last denied him through the treachery of American politics. Nothing sublimer was ever seen in an American court-room than William H. Seward, without reward, standing between the furious populace and the loathsome imbecile. Substitution!

In the realm of the fine arts there was as remarkable an instance. A brilliant but hypercriticised painter, Joseph William Turner, was met by a volley of abuse from all the art galleries of Europe. His paintings, which have since won the applause of all civilized nations, "The Fifth Plague of Egypt," "Fishermen on a Lee Shore in Squally Weather," "Calais Pier," "The Sun Rising Through Mist," and "Dido Building Carthage," were then targets for critics to shoot at. In defense of this outrageously abused man, a young author of twenty-four years, just one year out of college, came forth with his pen, and wrote the ablest and most famous essay on art that the world ever saw, or ever will see—John Ruskin's "Modern Painters." For seventeen years this author fought the battles of the maltreated artist, and after, in poverty and broken-heartedness, the painter had died, and the public tried to undo their cruelties toward him by giving him a big funeral and burial in St. Paul's Cathedral, his old-time friend took out of a tin box nineteen thousand pieces of paper containing drawings by the old painter, and through many weary and uncompensated months assorted and arranged them for public observation. People say John Ruskin in his old days is cross, misanthropic, and morbid. Whatever he may do that he ought not to do, and whatever he may say that he ought not to say between now and his death, he will leave this world insolvent as far as it has any capacity to pay this author's pen for its chivalric and Christian defense of a poor painter's pencil. John Ruskin for William Turner. Blood for blood. Substitution!

What an exalting principle this which leads one to suffer for another! Nothing so kindles enthusiasm or awakens eloquence, or chimes poetic canto, or moves nations. The principle is the dominant one in our religion—Christ the Martyr, Christ the celestial Hero, Christ the Defender, Christ the Substitute. No new principle, for it was old as human na[ture] but now on a grander, wider, higher, deeper, and more world-resounding s[cale]. The shepherd boy as a champion for Israel with a sling toppled the giant of Philistine braggadocio in the dust; but h[e] is another David who, for all the armies of churches militant and triumphant, [with] the Goliath of perdition into defeat [and] crash of his brazen armor like an [explo]sion at Hell Gate. Abraham had at God's command agreed to sacrifice his son Isaac, and the same God just in time [had] provided a ram of the thicket as a substitute; but there is another Isaac bound to the altar, and no hand arrests the [im]pledges of laceration and death, and [the] universe shivers, and quakes, and rends and groans at the horror.

All good men have for centuries been trying to tell whom this substitute was like, and every comparison, inspired or uninspired, evangelistic, prophetic, apostolic, and human, falls short, for Christ was the Great Unlike. Adam a type of Christ, because he came directly from God; Noah a type of Christ, because he delivered his own family from death; Melchisedec a type of Christ, because he had no predecessor or successor; Jonah a type of Christ, because he was cast by his brethren. Moses a type of Christ because he was a deliverer from bondage; Joshua a type of Christ, because he was a conqueror; Samson a type of Christ because of his strength to slay the lion and carry off the iron gates of impossibility; Solomon a type of Christ, in the affluence of his dominion; Jonah a type of Christ because of the stormy sea in which he threw himself for the rescue of others; but put together Adam, and Noah, and Melchisedec, and Joseph, and Moses, and Joshua, and Samson, and Solomon, and Jonah, and they would not make a fragment of a Christ, a quarter of a Christ, the half of a Christ, or the millionth part of a Christ.

When did attorney ever endure so much for a pauper client, or physician for a patient in the lazaretto, or mother for her child in membranous croup, as Christ for us, and Christ for you, and Christ for me? Shall any man or woman or child in any audience who has ever suffered for another find it hard to understand this Christ suffering for us? Shall those whose sympathies have been wrung in behalf of the unfortunate have no appreciation of that one moment which was lifted out of the ages of eternity as most conspicuous, when Christ gathered up all the sins of those to be redeemed under his one head, and all their sorrows under his other head, and said: "I will atone for these under my right arm, and will heal all those under my left arm. Strike me with all thy lightning shafts, O Eternal Justice! Roll over me with all thy surges, ye oceans of sorrow"? And the thunderbolts struck him from above, and the seas of trouble rose up from beneath, hurricane after hurricane, and cyclone after cyclone, and earth and there in presence of heaven and earth and hell, yea, all worlds witnessing the price, the bitter price, the transcendent price the awful price, the glorious price, the infinite price, the eternal price, as paid that sets us free.

That is what Paul means, that is what I mean, that is what all those who have ever had their heart changed mean by "blood." I glory in this religion of blood. I am thrilled as I see the suggestive wine in sacramental cup, whether it be of burnished silver set on cloth immaculately white, or rough-hewn from wood set on table in log-hut meeting-house of the wilderness. Now I am thrilled as I see the altars of ancient sacrifice crimson with the blood of the slain lamb, and Leviticus is to me not so much the Old Testament as the New. Now I see why the destroying angel passing over Egypt in the night spared all those houses that had blood sprinkled on their door-posts. No matter what Isaiah means when he speaks of "one in red apparel coming with dyed garments from Bozrah;" and whom the Apocalypse means when it describes a heavenly chieftain whose "vesture was dipped in blood;" and what John, the apostle, means when he speaks of the "precious blood that cleanseth from all sin;" and what the old, worn-out, decrepit missionary Paul means when, in my text, he cries, "Without shedding of blood is no remission." By that blood you all will be saved—or never saved at all.

Busy Scenes in Oriental Life.

Missionary's Visit to the Manufacturing and Trading Centres of Central China.

BY MRS. S. L. BALDWIN.

IN NANKING we have a very fine university, founded and carried on by Rev. J. C. Ferguson. He has personally raised nearly all of the money for the fine outfit of buildings, while the late Sloper Davis, of Boston, gave the beautiful university chapel. Mr. Ferguson has won the regard and admiration of the highest native officials for his educational work, and the sons of several of the most prominent are in the school, while the official who made the fine road sent and planted two thousand willow trees around the campus. Our hospital work here is also very extensive. Dr. Bonner, the able physician and surgeon in charge, treats the annually over twenty-five thousand patients. His wards are full, and many of the walls are covered with tablets gorgeously inscribed in honor of his work the gift of appreciative officials and distinguished patients.

As in North China, so here, advanced ground was taken against foot-binding, and the Women's Conference presented a solution to the Men's Conference, urging them to adopt stringent rules with regard to it. Many women and girls in both North China and their central stations, have unbound their feet and the number is constantly increasing. Christian example and powerfully by our educational work, has struck the death knell of this fearful cruelty. The effect of missionary teaching on this subject upon whole communities is finely illustrated by the fact that now in many places, heathen officials and gentry are using their influence against the custom by circulating petitions, and even memorializing the Emperor on the subject.

In Kin Kiang our first work in Central China, was commenced about thirty years ago. Both the General Board and woman's work are most prosperous. We have excellent boarding-schools for boys and girls, the latter founded and carried on by Miss Gertrude Howe, who, with Dr. Hoag, of Kin Kiang, this year completes her twenty-five years of service for this people. She the first woman in Central China, residing one hundred and fifty million people, unbound her feet, and her daughter now our Dr. Mary Stone, was the first baby never to have her feet bound. The Christian parents defied the iron custom of ages and refused to subject their little girl to such torture. Mary Stone and Ida Kahn, of this school, recently took their medical course in the University at Ann Arbor, and now are doing splendid medical work in our Mission in this place. They have recently been called to treat the wife of an ex-official and very wealthy prominent man, at Nan-Chang-Fu, the capital city of the wealthy Kian-Si Province. This man has thus become our stanch friend, and is most urgent that our Mission enter the city and open work there. He is ready to assist in securing property, and there seems little doubt but that we could collect money from the natives to build a hospital, if our Woman's Society could only send a physician and Evangelist there. Medical work properly conducted opens many doors and makes the people our friends, but much of its fruit is lost for lack of an evangelist in every hospital. This is an absolute necessity to conserve the medical work.

From Kin Kiang we returned 260 miles down the Yangtze again to Chin Kiang, there finding a telegram that our steamer would not leave for Foo Chow in Southern China as soon as we expected, we availed ourselves of the rare opportunity to visit the famous old city of Yan Chow. This is a most famous place, founded 2205 B. C. Marco Polo was made Governor of the place by the renowned Kub-Lai Khan in 1282. It now has a population of 500,000. To go to the place we took our mission-house boat up the river five miles, and then entered the grand canal. The sail up the broad canal fifteen miles was full of unusual interest. The country is fine, and on each side dotted with villages, temples, and shrines, while the country people, on foot, on donkeys, or in chairs, in their varied dress, gave great picturesqueness to the strange scene. On the broad, deep canal were many boats, great and small, but those which interested us most were the large boats crowded with refugees and their belongings, from the Shan Tung province in the north. They remain at their homes in that province during the spring and summer, and plant their little patches of ground and live upon the produce until autumn, when all resources being ended, each village will hire a large boat, and all the people, men, women and children, with their little all, are packed into it, and down the great canal they come by thousands to these more prosperous cities. Thirty or forty thousand will settle outside of a city—they are generally not allowed to enter—and there they remain to be supported by the city governments, which open soup kitchens. Forty thousand are being thus supported at Yan Chow this winter. They come every morning to these kitchens and are served with a full meal of hot rice soup, and in some places, as in Yan Chow, they are allowed to carry away in pails enough for the rest of the day. China stands almost alone as a heathen nation in thus trying to provide for her poor. We passed thousands of these boats. They were so crowded that it seemed impossible that they could sleep, or have any place to stretch themselves. Now and then they land and take a run on the bank, which they seemed greatly to enjoy, while the women cooked the meals over fires they made in holes dug in the banks. It was indeed a strange scene, hardly to be duplicated the world.

Yan Chow is a very favorite residence of both active and ex-officials—the former keeping their handsome homes and families here, while they are acting officials elsewhere. The city in consequence has unusually fine houses and famous temples. Three of the most prominent official families are the Sun, Ho and Li — the last related to Li Hung Chang, who owns much property here. These three families are very friendly with our missionaries. In consequence we were all invited to "afternoon tea" at Mr. Ho's elegant place. The three families are related and representatives of each were present in the sons—young men of fine appearance and advanced ideas, two of whom are expecting to come soon to the United States for study. The Ho residence is very extensive and oriental. One-storied spacious rooms are built around pretty courts in which were fish-ponds, pavilions with seats; wonderful rock work, up and over which we climbed by steps in the rock; rustic summer houses, rare shrubbery and trees; deer and bird houses; lattice balconies, rare and costly furnishings, vases and bric-a-brac most ancient; cases of rare bronze and porcelain; wonderful lanterns, suspended from the high ceilings — all presented a scene of wealth, luxury, and oriental display, rarely given to a foreigner to see.

THE CHIEF MAGISTRATE OF SHANGHAI——A CHINESE GENTLEMAN'S HOME.

We sipped our tea from rarest china, and talked with the gentlemen without constraint of their own desires for Western knowledge and advance for China: but no glimpse had we of the pretty women of the family, who were back in the inner rooms. But everywhere I see signs of these "inner room" doors being ajar — soon they will open wide and the imprisoned come forth.

We visited two of the famous Buddhist temples. First, the three-storied temple. It had the usual three great Buddhas in the main temple with other gods in the second story, but up in the third we found a huge image, the god of earthquakes. In front of him on three flat cushions lay a man with face toward the god. He was a victim of chills and fever, and lay there for the god of shakes to cure him! He was too entirely absorbed in his purpose and worship to even look at us. We then went to the temple of 10,000 gods. It really has 12,000. It is also three-storied, and is indeed a wonderful place. The priests have exercised their ingenuity to put gods everywhere.

In addition to the usual three large Buddhas with the twenty-four disciples of giant size—twelve on each side of the main hall, all bright with new paint and gilt—every beam and post and cornice and niche was set thick with images about eight inches high. The ceiling, rafters, the rock work and every possible place was set closely with them, while in front of the great Buddhas were blocks of wood, placed there that some of the spirit of the gods might enter into them before they were carved into images to take their places in this great temple. In the upper story we again saw something new. On each side of the great images was a bedroom. In each a large bed, and on each bed an immense image asleep. They were covered with quilts, and under the side of the bed were their Chinese shoes carefully placed as any one would drop them on retiring. The bed and room were furnished in the usual way. Over the entrance to these rooms on a small tablet was inscribed the familiar words: "Ask and ye shall receive!" Who come specially to these gods for help? Persons suffering from insomnia. Here they come, make their offerings and worship these sleeping images, and expect to be cured as did the man before the god of shakes!

There is much of great interest for the traveler in this old aristocratic city of Yan Chow, rarely visited by tourists. The former Chinese Consul in New York, Mr. Shu, who with his charming wife once visited us in our home in Brooklyn, has his home here, but was not in the city when we were there. He was most astonished to learn that we had been there and greatly regretted not having seen us, while we were exceedingly sorry to learn, though not surprised, that the pleasant little lady who went with him to New York, was one of three wives. He is known for being devoted to all three and as never having spoken an unkind word to any of them.

Now a word about Shanghai. Its growth is wonderful. It is certainly from its central position and vast business the New York of China. In the old city within the walls are at least 400,000 people, while outside in the great and fine foreign concessions—English, American and French — are 400,000 more natives, with about 6,000 Europeans and Americans. In the old city the natives live in their usual unclean, poverty-stricken manner, while the other mighty half of the population in the foreign concessions are a new people for their concessions are justly called "Model Settlement." An American could do no better work in street cleaning than is done here, in these most beautifully kept, finely paved, broad streets, or roads as they are called. While the long, tree-shaded, busy Bund is indeed attractive. The growth of the city and business is very great. Cotton factories have come and are doing an immense business, while watch factories and flour mills add to the busy scene. Twenty-five thousand operatives are employed already, and strange to tell, thousands of Chinese girls, most neat and modest in their attire, are among the very best workers in the cotton mills. This is a startling innovation to the Chinese, but it has proved a perfect godsend to many.

A LESSON ON FORGIVENESS.

Sunday School Lesson for April 24. Matt. 18: 21-35. Golden Text, Luke 6: 37.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE Lord Jesus had been teaching his disciples, who had been striving which should be the greatest, the great lesson of becoming as little children. From this he went on to say: "Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother." This is the honest, simple, childlike way. But the heart of fallen man is not honest, simple, and childlike. Men in general, even some who know God's forgiveness, would rather tell the brother's fault to anybody else than to the brother himself. In his heart, the one who is wronged condemns that brother, and cherishes against him the feeling of condemnation and of a personal wrong, for which he thinks the sympathy of others is due to him. But the thought of how to be a blessing to the one who has offended him does not enter into his heart. And if it were suggested, he would probably say he does not deserve it.

Why do our natural hearts love to tell the bad deeds of others? It is the same principle which actuated the disciples when they strove which should be the greatest: it is the miserable, mean self which says, I am better than thou. Our Lord teaches that when one man has wronged another, it is not the one who is wronged, but the one who has done the wrong that has to be considered: he is much in the worst case, for he has offended God; how is he to be gained? He is not to be avoided, not to be ostracized; in God's name he is to be gained; but there is no thought of how the wronged one is to be compensated. If the telling the offender of his fault alone does not gain him, the one who has been wronged is to take two or three more, always with the thought of gaining him; and if that does not answer, then, and only then, is the thing to be made public: "tell it unto the church." And only if he then resists, is he to "be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican."

Oh, what a law of love is meant to regulate the kingdom of heaven upon earth! And it is just in this connection that the striking words were uttered by our Lord: "Verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." What, then, is this power to bind and to loose? Surely, the following words show us: "Again I say unto you, that if two of you shall agree on earth touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven, for where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Is not this power simply the power of prayer, and very specially the prayer which gains the brother who has wronged us?

It was again in this connection that Peter came to Jesus and said: "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?" It was a very great overestimate of human nature by Peter to think that the natural heart could even accomplish so much as this genuine forgiveness. But what was Peter's amazement when the Lord, far from commending him for such magnanimity, said: "I say not unto thee until seven times, but until seventy times seven." Yes; even as God forgives. God's first thought towards the sinner who wrongs him is how to gain that sinner; how to be able justly to forgive him; how to restore and to transform him. Man's first thought of one who has wronged him is retaliation against the offender, enmity, hatred and vengeance.

"Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants." One was brought before him, which owed him ten thousand talents. Having nothing to pay, his lord commanded him to be sold, and his wife and children and all that he had, and payment to be made. There was in those days no thought of injustice in this. According to the laws of the country, debtors, as well as their wives and children, must be sold for their debts. It was hard, but it was only common justice, the debtor had no claim. Only one thing remained, it was to cry for mercy. Falling down at the feet of the king, he cried: "Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all." Knowing that the promise was not worth the breath that uttered it, the king, out of pure compassion at the hopeless condition of his debtor, "loosed him and forgave him the debt." The heavy load was gone, and the man was free, as free as though he had never been in debt at all. And "I am that debtor," says every converted reader, "and God, out of pure compassion, has forgiven me."

But the same servant went out and found one of his fellow-servants which owed him one hundred pence, and he laid hands on him and took him by the throat, saying: "Pay me that thou owest." The fellow-servant came to him with the very same pleas which he had urged to the king, but with a very different result. His enormous debt of about twenty million dollars had been all wiped off and cancelled, but he would not deal with his fellow-servant in mercy: "he went and cast him into prison till he should pay the debt." It is easy for us to be indignant with this man, but are we in the habit of making the measure of God's grace to us the measure of our compassion to those who do us wrong? If not, are we not described by this very man? How do we act to an unfaithful servant, a treacherous friend? Is it just on the line of God's dealings with us?

The fellow-servants, when they saw it, were very sorry, and they came and told their lord all that was done. And the king recalled him and reversed his pardon. "O, thou wicked servant!" he said. "I forgave thee all that debt because thou desiredst me; shouldest not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow servant even as I had pity on thee? And his lord was wroth and delivered him unto the tormentors till he should pay all that was due to him." And that was never! "So likewise shall my Heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye, from your hearts, forgive not every one his brother their trespasses." Reversed forgiveness! How unspeakably awful! When a sense of God's pardon does not lead to the entire yielding up of ourselves to be transformed into the same image as our Lord, if we do not indeed let him make us new creatures, so that old things are passed away and all things become new, his forgiveness may be recalled!

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

PETER'S question, with which our lesson opens, shows how crude and mechanical was the spirit the disciples brought to Christ's teaching. He tried to impart to them a great principle, the disposition which would forget all personal wrongs and would lead to kindness and magnanimity. Peter, who was doubtless the representative and spokesman of the twelve, failed to grasp this principle. He knew the rule of the Rabbis, "Forgive a first offence, forgive a second offence, forgive a third offence; but punish a fourth." He inferred from Christ's remarks, in the early part of this chaper, that Christ was not satisfied with this rule, but he wanted a rule of some kind, so he put his question, proposing seven times as the limit of forbearance. Christ's answer, "seventy times seven" lifted the question far above law; but to make it absolutely clear, the Master gave him the parable of the lesson, enforcing the principle he had already laid down, that one whom God had forgiven could not consistently resent personal wrongs, even though often repeated.

I forgive him. The word implies not so much a remission of the penalty, as a burial, an extinction of the wrong itself. Macaulay tells the story of a great king, to whom one of the amateur detectives, who are to be found among courtiers everywhere, brought a sealed paper. "What is this?" the king asked. The courtier told him that he had discovered among his majesty's trusted officers a number who were in communication with the enemy, and that the paper contained the list of their names and their offences. "Do you say," the king asked, that they are high in place and in my favor and yet have been conspiring against me?" The courtier assured him that the list included the names of many of the king's intimate friends. "That is shocking," said the king, "I am sorry, very sorry that a man could be so base as to profess friendship while treacherously undermining me. Burn me the paper." The courtier handed it to him, and to his amazement the king threw it into the fire. The courtier could not keep the secret, but told several of his men how vain would be any attempt to deceive such a king. But there was one man who, if not more, who heard it, felt sure that his name was certainly on the list, was so impressed by his master's splendid magnanimity that he wrote off that very day to the enemy, definitely and positively refusing to have any more dealings with him. "I should be ashamed," he said, "to be false to so noble a master any longer."

Would take account. In the parable the king typifies God. The taking account does not represent the last judgment. God is taking account of us all the time, and sees whether we deserve the mercy we crave. An action was brought against a firm in New York in the United States Court. The defendant consulted his lawyer and in confidence confessed that he had committed the offence with which he was charged. "But," said he, "it was done inadvertently. I did not know that the plaintiff had any claim on the property." The lawyer told him that he would be likely be punished, even though he had acted in good faith. But an investigation showed that the claimant had secured his rights by very mean and tricky means. The lawyer said at once to the defendant, "This will save you from punishment." The defendant looked at him in surprise. He asked: "How can it exculpate me to have it proved that some one else has done wrong?" "That is all right. The man has chosen to bring his action in court of equity. Now it is a principle of that court that he who seeks equity must do equity. He must come into court with clean hands." So it proved. The judge in settling the case decided for the defendant on the ground that although the plaintiff's claims were valid in law they were not entitled in equity to be enforced. It is so in God's court. As Shakespeare says, "We all do plead for mercy, and that same prayer should teach us all to render deeds of mercy."

Delivered him to the tormentors. The insolvent debtor of those days was in a very sad predicament. He might not only sent to prison, where he must work like a horse turning a mill, but he might be subjected to torture. A historian who was contemporary with Christ describes the treatment to which a man was subjected who did not pay his debts. His neck was twisted until blood gushed out of his mouth and ears. The object of such treatment was ostensibly to make him disclose the hiding place of his money, it being presumed that he was concealing his property so as to evade payment. It is not many years since the law was repealed which permitted a debtor to be imprisoned indefinitely. A story is told of a man who was very angry against defaulter and his minister pleaded with him to be merciful. "Leave him to God, sir," the minister, "he will punish him." But the man made a reply which showed his own basis of hope. He said: "Oh no, he won't; he is much too forgiving for that."

Owed him ten thousand talents. He must have been the governor of a province, or some high officer, who was defaulter. No ordinary servant could contract so enormous a debt. A talent of silver is supposed to be worth almost two thousand dollars. The sum was doubtless placed by our Lord at so high a figure to show the hopelessness of payment. In the other case, the man who owed a hundred pence might be able to pay eventually. A hundred pence was equivalent to about eighteen dollars. A well-known minister tells a story in illustration. Coming downstairs one morning he found his wife in a state of indignation. The breakfast was spoiled and everything in confusion. She complained that she had carefully instructed the servant but that all her trouble was wasted. The servant was stupid or careless. It was idle for her to plead for another trial she should be discharged that day. "I hope, my dear," said the minister, "that my Master never feels that way about me. I have given him abundant cause to discharge me from his service, but he has been very patient with me. Suppose we give Mary another trial." And Mary was kept on.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

IN "BIG-TREE LAND."

Facts of Interest Regarding Forests and the Forester's Life—Missionary Work Among the Lumbermen.

IT has been recently said by an authority of high repute that in a few years the commercial value of timber of the State of Washington will be more than all the gold turned out by California. According to a recent government report, "standing timber of all kinds in Washington is estimated at 410,000,000,000 feet, covering 23,500,000,000 acres," about one-sixth of the total timber of the United States. Our illustration shows one of Washington's great trees, a low-laid monarch of the forest, its victors standing near conquering weapons in hand. Men that wield the battle-axe in the woodland warfare as this, should wax mighty in muscle. Lungs that breathe in such free air must surely breathe strong and wholesome. Right royally should the ringing that falls such arboreal giants! Perhaps, however, the ring of the woodsman's axe is more musical where trees are not so mighty, and more in keeping with the poetic spirit of the greenwood where foliage is more plenty. The prosaic truth is that special instruments are needed in handling the big western trees, and that saws come into play. Through life of the woodsman, however, especially in the interior of the lumber states, has hardly changed its primitive features. Existence in such close touch with nature seems to conduce to morality and health; they have few vices. They must live for long periods in the recesses of the woods in log cabins which they construct, and which are fitted up with conveniences for only the barest life of the pioneer. Plenty of exercise, good appetite, sound sleep and simple fare make of them sturdy, healthy folk. Bread cooked in the ashes, coffee drunk from mugs, game in plenty constitutes the frequent fare; and at night, gathered around the blazing logs in the rude open fire-place, social life with its story-telling, its rough kindnesses, its chorus of song, perhaps, has scenes picturesque enough in spite of isolation and hardship.

Chivalrous, if rough, championship of woman is one of the typical woodsman's characteristics. His rude, free life somehow teaches him gentleness to the weak. Among many missionaries who have found his appreciative of service, none has been more warmly regarded than Miss Emma Nason, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., who has for a number of years conducted a lumbermen's mission in that State. She has several stations, and has done a great deal of good in a humble but hearty way. Many a young woodsman has been drawn to Christ by her tender words of motherly kindness. Wherever the sound of the axe is heard way back in the valleys and mountains of Western interiors, we may be sure there will be work for the missionary, and that the missionary will find it.

A LOW-LAID MONARCH OF THE WOODS, NEAR TACOMA, WASHINGTON.

The Good-night Kiss.

"Mamma, put me to bed, please." "I am occupied. Let Sarah do it," says mamma, and Sarah the house-girl, undresses the baby, tucks her into her little cot and regales her, meanwhile with a bit of street gossip, which, though it may not be pernicious, is distinctly not elevating. The loving of her little flock away for the night is one of the mother's blessed tasks and a precious privileges which should never be delegated to another except in case of necessity. And those who share the mother-life ought to make it their duty to preserve her and the children from this necessity as far as possible by relieving her of tasks which interfere with the children's possession of their mother at bedtime. It is to the interest of those with whom the children shall spend their after-life, that they have as much of their mother as possible. The little child who doesn't say his prayers at a mother's knee and is not kissed to sleep by a mother's lips, loses something that nothing in after-life can ever make up to him.

Blue-Birds.

"Sing loud and clear, O blue-bird dear!"

Four years ago the terrible freeze which killed the orange trees below the frostline in Florida, wrought havoc among small furred and feathered folk. In some sections it has looked as if the blue-bird were exterminated and would return no more with the dogwood blooms and the wild honeysuckles of springtime. A Southern paper makes the proud announcement that, after four years' absence, blue-birds are coming back and that one pair have already begun nest-building in the parks.

"Our Father."

They knelt at my knee and said their prayers,
Two little boys so long ago.
Now they are men oppressed with cares,
But they're better men—they tell me so—
Because they knelt each night at my knee
And said "Our Father" long ago.

Sea Flowers.

There was recently on exhibition in the rooms of a charitable association an exquisite and artistic collection of sea flora, representing 800 varieties of sea flowers, beautifully mounted. The specimens all come from Monterey Bay, California, and among them are thirty said to be unequaled on this continent for perfection of form and color. Some of the specimens were mounted on velvet, others on ribbon, and the most airy and delicate fern-like leaves were mounted on illusion. School teachers and children, artists and beauty lovers were greatly interested. The collection is the creditable work of a woman, Miss Westfaile, of Pacific Grove, Cal., who carefully explained her treasures of the deep to little folks. Land-dwellers are surprised at the undreamed of beauty of flowers of the sea, and the study of sea flora is most interesting—as for instance, in the hydroid class. Hydroids closely resemble in color and shape the thistle common to fields and meadows, but they are plants which have almost as much animal as vegetable life.

Saving the Children.

We are persuaded, says editorially a prominent secular journal, that the vice and crime of a great city, which in their maturity present insoluble problems, and of which almshouses and prisons are costly palliatives, might be largely diminished by directing more attention to the care of children who are growing up under criminal or vicious influences. We have noble men and women who are doing their best to apply the remedy of the open park and the children's playground and of the loving care which should guide their supervision. Some day municipalities will doubtless engraft this plan upon educational systems. Every division of every ward will rejoice in its healing influence. The city will inexorably require that the process of making "toughs" (now going on without serious hindrance) shall stop. It will see, also, that in every section where circumstances require it, opportunities for recreation are provided under safe and wholesome conditions. If bands of good men and women do these good things now in a few instances, why should it not come about that they should do the like in hundreds and thousands of instances, the city helping them? If we learn from one gas company to make gas for ourselves at thirty-five cents a thousand cubic feet, instead of buying it at ninety cents from another gas company, why should we not take these similar profits and devote them to this beautiful work of child-saving.

Sowing Good Seeds.

"The seeds of good we sow,
Both in shade and shine will grow,
And will keep our hearts aglow,
While the days are going by."

GONE HOME!

IN the years of early childhood,
She has passed away from earth,
Passed away from sin and sorrow,
To the cherished land of mirth,
To the shore of endless sunshine
Where no billows beat above,
To the land of glowing splendor,
To the world of perfect love.

How sincerely did we love her
When with us she dwelt below,
Ere she passed from earth to heaven
And went home from care and woe!
Oh, how sweet appeared her features
As the casket held her frame,
And the tears fell from our eyelids
As we softly breathed her name!

Here we nevermore can see her,
Not again can we caress
The sweet child that lives in heaven,
Free from sorrow and distress.
Till we pass beyond the shadows,
Till we see the light of day,
Till with angel wings, like Florence,
We from earth shall glide away.

Philanthropic Dogs.

ENGLAND has several dogs prominent in charitable works. There is "Folkestone Joe," who makes a winsome beggar and who has collected much money for the Folkestone Hospital and other charities. He says not a word, but a cord around his neck, bears the word "Hospital," and Joe does the rest with his soft appealing eyes. His master, Mr. Charles Russell, and all the Folkestone folk hold Joe in high esteem. "Schnapsie" has endowed a cot for children at the Great Northern Hospital, where he is always joyfully welcomed by the little friends whom he helps so greatly. He is a long-coated Dachshund and won several prizes at the Botanic Garden Show, where as usual, he labored heartily in the cause of charity. He carries around his silky neck, a pretty collecting-bowl of which he is quite proud, and he stands up and begs in an irresistible way. "Schnapsie's" mistress, Mrs. Allingham, to whom he was presented by the Countess Thurn, has trained him carefully, and he has charming dog-manners. Everybody who visits Southsea Pier knows "Pat" the collie, who takes up collections for the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. He is so kind and intelligent that he is a living argument in behalf of the cause for which he pleads for two hours every day on the pier from April to October. With eloquent eyes and tail, he asks and thanks everyone himself, his master, Mr. Gerald E. Morgan, of Cromwell Houses, rendering no prompting. "Pat" has collected nearly $400 in coppers alone, a proof of much patience and endurance. "Tim," of Paddington Station collects for the widows and orphans of the Great Western Railway, and people, as they step off the train at Paddington, always find "Tim" on duty; he knows the arrival of all the trains and is faithfully on time. Tim began work six years ago, and has collected nearly $2,000, much of which was given in pennies—a good work, establishing honest claim to the silver cup which is to be presented to him, and which is identical with that bestowed on Leo, the famous St. Bernard known as the "Hospital Dog of Cork."

The New England Garden.

The flowers, writes one who knows his theme, that struggle back to life after their long, winter sleep in the prim, box-bordered beds, have been growing there since earliest recollection—so long, indeed, that no one knows who planted them. Seldom does a rare flower find its way among the old-fashioned blooms, for with the New Englander old favorites and old ways are the best. When the missionary society is to meet at Betsy's house, the quaint blue pitcher on the claw-foot table is filled with day lilies, and a fresh bunch of asparagus is placed above the tiny looking-glass. The china vases on the shelf are reserved for the sweet cinnamon roses, and if Betsy's grandmother were to step into the sitting-room on the eventful day, she would find it "fixed up" exactly as she would have adorned it for a quilting bee, fifty years before.

War or Peace?

BEFORE this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches its readers, the die may have been cast which is to decide the course of our government in the Cuban question. The spark may have been fanned into a flame of war and devastation; or a wise diplomacy may have found an honorable way out of the difficulty, and Peace may have once more spread her wings over the West Indian archipelago, bringing tranquility to two nations, and security to the unhappy people of Cuba. God grant that the outcome of all the turmoil and negotiation may be an honorable and lasting peace!

In the heated controversy which has vexed the country for months past, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has had no share. While the storm-clouds have been darkening the horizon and the nations have been arming for prospective battle, our faithful battalions have been serving the Master in the same simple and straightforward way in which they have fought other campaigns on similar fields of suffering. With bread and blessing their only weapons, they have carried the war into the heart of the enemy's country, and have succeeded in driving back the gaunt wolves of famine and rescuing thousands from starvation. Such are the only victories they seek. In this campaign they have had the heartiest cooperation of the American people, from the President down to the humblest citizen.

Should war now come, it will entail consequences too sorrowful to contemplate. Shut off from all succor, the non-combatant peasantry of Cuba must inevitably perish. Their rescue from starvation by Christian America will have been in vain, for war will doom them to certain destruction. On the decision of this grave question of war or peace, therefore, hang the lives of 200,000 innocent men, women, and children, who, having no personal share in the conflict, must yet be the greatest and most immediate sufferers.

This is the problem which our government has to face and a clear comprehension of which has, till now, stayed the hand of our conscientious Executive from an act, which, once performed, it would be impossible to recall. The highest honor, the widest mercy, the grandest compassion are involved. Shall it be recorded that our nation, which has already established a flawless fame for its humanity to the weak and the oppressed knowingly gave over these reconcentrados to their fate? Or shall it be written down on the page of history that we chose the nobler part, and gave them life? Which decision would be the better example to the world, and the greater honor to ourselves?

We pray that the All-Wise may guide our Executive, his Cabinet and Congress in this trying time, and enable them to discern their duty and to perform it, fearless of man's opinion, and as in the sight of the Judge of all mankind. The path of duty and that of honor are one, and only by following that path can the deeds of a civilized and Christian nation be kept free from blot or stain.

Religion a Joy.

WHERE shall I find words enough threaded with light, to set forth the pleasure of religion? David, unable to describe it in words, played it on a harp. Mrs. Hemans, not finding enough power in prose, sings that praise in a canto. Christopher Wren, unable to describe it in language, sprung it into the arches of St. Paul. John Bunyan, unable to present it in ordinary phraseology, takes all the fascination of allegory. Handel, with ordinary music unable to reach the height of the theme, rouses it up in an oratorio. Oh, there is no life on earth so happy as a really Christian life. I do not mean a sham Christian life, but a real Christian life. Where there is a thorn there is a whole garland of roses. Where there is one groan, there are three doxologies. Where there is one day of cloud, there is a whole season of sunshine. Take the humblest Christian man that you know—angels of God canopy him with their white wings; the Lord is his Shepherd, picking out for him green pastures by still waters; if he walks forth, heaven is his body guard; if he lie down to sleep, ladders of light, angel-blossoming, are let into his dreams; if he be thirsty, the potentates of heaven are his cup-bearers. If he sit down to food, his plain table blooms into the king's banquet. Men will say, "Look at that old fellow with the worn-out coat;" the angels of God cry, "Litt up your heads, ye everlasting gates, and let him come in." Fastidious people cry, "Get off my front steps;" the doorkeepers of heaven cry, "Come, you blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom." When he comes to die, though he may be carried out in a pine box to the potter's field, to that potters field the chariots of Christ will come down and the cavalcade will crowd all the boulevards of heaven.

Wide Unrest.

THE most of people wish they were in some other occupation. They know the disadvantages and perils of their own position and do not realize that all occupations have disadvantages and perils. Those who are in the professions are undergoing a sapping of the brain and nerve foundations. Literary men in this country are driven with whip and spur to their topmost speed. Not one brain-worker out of a hundred observes any moderation.

There is something in all our occupations which predisposes to disease. If we be stout, to disorders ranging from fevers to apoplexy. If we be frail, from diseases ranging from consumption to paralysis. Printers rarely reach fifty years. Watchmakers, in marking the time for others, shorten their own. Chemists breathe death in their laboratories; and potters absorb paralysis. Painters fall under their own brush. Foundrymen take death in with their filings. Shoemakers pound away their own lives on the last. Over-driven merchants measure off their own lives with the yard-stick. Millers grind their own lives with the grist. Masons dig their own graves with the trowel. And in all our occupations and professions there are the elements of peril. By change of business or profession do not let us think we can be freed.

PEACE-MAKERS.

BLESSED are the peace-makers, for they shall be called the children of God! Blessed are they that overcome evil with good! Blessed are they who give the soft answer that turns away wrath! Blessed are they who are severe with their faults, and merciful to their neighbor's faults! Offences must surely come, but oh! let us not be swift to carry them, and ready to give them voice.

We may as well acknowledge that there is in every man and woman a certain amount of fight. We are, generally speaking, ready to defend ourselves, even before we are blamed; forgetting that to excuse is in most cases, to accuse ourselves. Opportunities for disputes are on every hand. Men find them in the market, in the clubs, in all places where humanity congregates. Political prejudices and business jealousies allow men to vent their irritability abroad; so that really bad tempered men often pass among their relatives for amiable characters. Women find in a succession of servants a safety-valve; or they interfere in church matters, and with apparently the best intentions set the congregation against the pastor, and one-half the sitters in pews against the other half; for if people are disposed to wrangle they never want an excuse. They are like John Lilburn, of Commonwealth fame, who, rather than lack cause for disputing, would make John quarrel with Lilburn, and Lilburn quarrel with John.

Yet I affirm that these irritable, fractious people, are not really as quarrelsome as are some who call themselves peace-makers. For there is a kind of peace-making that is much worse than either Touchstone's "reply churlish," or "reproof valiant," or "countercheck quarrelsome," or "lie circumstantial," or even "lie direct"—a peace-maker, like a very ravening wolf of mischief; yet wearing such a white lambskin that it deceives the very shepherd of the flock.

These dangerous peace-makers go about "talking over" motes until they have made motes into beams. They deplore imaginary wrongs, till they have wrought them into real wrongs. They stroke a little irritation, or offence, until they have established a raw or running sore. For instance: Mary and Ann are relatives and friends. They have both frank, outspoken natures. They are impulsive and imaginative and liable in speech to exaggerate. But this exaggeration is mostly expressed by intonations and gestures, which are quite untranslatable in words; it follows then that no attempt should be made to express what cannot be expressed. Yet some pretended friend, either through ill-will or in very idleness, "feels it to be their duty" to repeat to Mary what Ann said. Now, ill-will never speaks well, and Mary feels a little astonished and hurt at her friend Ann; and then Ann is kindly informed of Mary's anger. Apologies and explanations follow, and are transmitted from one to the other, until both feel the affair to be a nuisance, and begin to harbor hard thoughts, and look coldly in each other's faces. A little more of such peace-making, and the self-appointed go-between gets the reward worked for—a little misunderstanding grown to an irreparable quarrel.

When this point has been attained, the pretended peace-maker retires from the shameful field, and the world, not apt to look below the surface, has no worse verdict for such destructive meddling than "well-meaning indiscretion." Yet, it is worth noticing that in friendships of this obtrusive character, it is always the faults, and the querulous, impatient speeches they feel it to be "their duty" to tell; never are they impelled to tell pleasant truths, or to repeat words of generous praise.

No Christian believes that these are the kind of peace-makers to whom the kingdom of heaven is promised. The true peace-maker is severe towards his own faults, merciful in judging those of others. He remembers that Christ represents censoriousness as not only the offspring, but the proof of hypocrisy (Matt. 7: 4, 5), and that the Divine order is in all cases to "overcome evil with good." Also, that never in his whole life may he have an opportunity for splendid deeds, or great acts of benevolence; but that every day he may believe the best, hope the best, and cultivate that charity which "thinketh no evil."

Did Christ, the great Peace-maker, begin his mediation between God and man by accusing us to our Father? Ah, no! that is the peculiar office of the devil; a really diabolical office, for the word "devil" means traducer, slanderer. And he is the accuser of the brethren. So, then, an earthly peace-maker who begins his mission by insinuations, by faint praise that is dispraise, by apologies that irritate, knows nothing of that Gospel which is "first pure, then peaceable."

In the thousand petty annoyances of life, it is good for every one to appeal from themselves angry, to themselves calm; to remember that in all the relations of life, we are imperfect creatures, and to expect no more from others than we are willing to concede to them. Above all, to reflect that in any dispute, he that first yields is the conqueror; for it is "the glory of a man to pass by a transgression."

THE BOAT THAT DIVES.

EXPERTS from New York and many other cities went to Staten Island Sound last week to witness the performances of the wonderful little craft invented by Mr. John P. Holland. A more extraordinary vessel could not easily be imagined. While going at full speed she plunged her nose in the water and went down at an angle of fifteen degrees, until she was completely submerged. In a short time her prow appeared above the surface, about a half a mile from the place where the event down. She came gracefully out of the water, righted herself easily, and proceeded up the sound on an even keel as if nothing remarkable had occurred. The experiment was repeated several times and with perfect success. Then two steel caps, one at the bow and the other at the stern, were flung back, each discovering a dynamite tube, from which a cylindrical block of wood three feet long representing a dynamite projectile, was shot a quarter of a mile, by the force of compressed air. A real projectile Mr. Holland says, could be thrown a distance of a mile and a half. The boat is forty-five feet long and has a diameter of eight feet. Her shape is like the ordinary whaleback, tapering at each end. The superstructure is twenty-five feet long, with a conning tower about four feet high near the center. The peculiarity of the boat is the arrangements for diving deep and rising at will to the surface. This consists of a series of water-tight compartments on each side the vessel, which are quickly and easily filled with water. The water is of sufficient weight to sink her, and when it is expelled by the pressure of compressed air the vessel recovers its buoyancy and rises to the surface. The mechanical arrangements are so perfect that a crew of only six men can manage the electric engines and navigate the boat. When all the apertures are closed for a descent, there is sufficient air inside to last the crew for six hours, and should it be necessary to remain a longer time under water, a fresh supply of air can be obtained by sending up a float, to which a rubber tube is attached. The inventor believes that a run of fifty miles under water could easily be made. It is obvious that in naval hostilities such a craft would be of inestimable value. It could pass the most powerful forts with impunity, and could approach an enemy's ship undetected, and, when near enough, attach a torpedo against her, blow her up from below, or fire a dynamite shell against her side, and instantly disappear in below the wave, run back to the shelter of a friendly fleet. Unhappily we have had an experience in the horror of the Maine of the ease with which the most formidable battleships may be thus destroyed. It will be with extreme reluctance that we resort to such tactics, but if hostile warships do come to our coasts, it is well that we should be prepared to meet them with the only argument such people could understand. There are times when even the Christian, who is always a lover of peace, finds in God's own government justification for war.

He executeth judgment for the oppressed; who giveth food to the hungry. The Lord looseth the prisoners (Ps. 146:7).

Wrapped in the Flag.

The death of a veteran, named Cheney, is reported by the Boston Journal as having taken place at South Orrington, Mass., on March 20. Although he was ninety-six years old, he retained his mental and physical vigor in a remarkable degree to within a short time of his death. The man had an astonishing record of service in his country's cause. He served in the war of 1812, in the Mexican war and was on board the old Constitution in some of its most severe fights. He was in active service on board the old frigate in 1815, when a gun burst during an engagement with a privateer. Cheney was so near it at the time that the noise of the explosion almost destroyed his hearing. He never fully recovered that sense, but that was the only defect the old man had. An hour or two before he died he told an attendant to go to his sea-chest and bring a bundle to him. Inside a lot of oiled paper, perfumed with camphor and cologne, was an aged, but well preserved American flag made of raw silk. "When I am buried, put that about my coffin," he said, and soon after became unconscious. His last wish was respected, and veterans of the late war came miles to pay their respects to an old soldier and sailor whose services antedated theirs by nearly half a century. His pension was only twelve dollars a month, but he was evidently well satisfied to have rendered the service to his country, otherwise he would not have desired the flag to cover his remains.

THE HOLLAND SUBMARINE TORPEDO BOAT UNDER TEST IN RARITAN BAY.

The soldiers of Christ have a like satisfaction in their service. They seldom make money by it, but they rejoice in what they have been enabled to do, and are assured of the reward that is reserved for them in heaven.

I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness (II. Tim. 4:7).

His Neighbor's Oil.

A curious lawsuit was decided recently by the Supreme Court of Ohio. It was brought by the owner of a farm, who applied to the court for an injunction to restrain the owners of an adjoining farm from sinking an oil well near the boundary of the two farms. He contended that the projected well would drain the oil from his land and they would really be selling the oil that belonged to him. The Court refused to grant the injunction, on the ground that the persons proposing to sink the well had a perfect right to do so on their own property, so long as they did not trespass on his land. It also suggested to him that he could prevent his oil being drained off into his neighbors' well, by sinking a series of wells on his own side of the boundary, which would collect the oil from his own land. The decision seems reasonable but there are always people who are envious of others who gain advantages that they are too lazy or too indifferent to secure for themselves. It is so even in religion, where there is an abundance of God's grace for all, but some would be excluded from it if the self-righteous people could have their way. There are some now who need the reproof that Christ administered to the bigots and the exclusive classes of his day:

Ye have taken away the key of knowledge: ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered (Luke 10:52).

Marriage or Separation.

Two immigrants who arrived at New York last week from Germany were enlightened by the Immigration Commissioners on the subject of American ideas of morality. One of them was a young butcher who had saved three thousand dollars in his own country, which he had brought with him to begin business here. His companion was a handsome young woman, who had been his neighbor in Berlin and had accompanied him to act as his housekeeper. The commissioners readily admitted the man, but were not satisfied as to the status of the woman. They took the technical ground that as she was practically a servant, who might be discharged at the will of her employer, she was liable to become a public burden. The young butcher was astonished at the objection and offered guarantees that she would be retained permanently in his employ. These, however, the commissioners rejected, and they detained the young woman at Ellis Island, to be sent back by the next steamer. After a long conversation between the pair, the young man asked the commissioners on what terms his companion could be admitted, and was told that the only way was by her becoming his wife. He objected to this, but, finding the commissioners firm, he reluctantly yielded, and an inspector was sent with them to see that the marriage was legally performed. Public opinion will be on the side of the commissioners in this case, and it would be well if intending immigrants were made aware of the fact that persons who want to evade the obligations of moral life are not admitted to the country. Still more important is it that people who are hoping to gain entrance to heaven when they die should realize that there are conditions as to that, too. None will be admitted there but those who in life have entered into living union with Christ.

Whosoever, therefore, shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father who is in heaven; but whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father who is in heaven (Matt. 10:32).

Is Divorce Hereditary?

Two remarkable divorce cases tried in Indiana recently, have led a local journal to make an investigation of the antecedents of the applicants. In one of the cases, in which suit was brought by the wife, her pedigree was traced back for several generations. It was found that her mother, her mother's sisters, one of her grandmothers and her sister, and two of her great-grandmothers had all been divorced, some of them more than once. A similar investigation was made in the pedigree of a man who was an applicant for divorce. It was found that his brothers and sisters, several uncles, one of his grandfathers, and several other members of his family had been divorced, some of them three times. A further investigation covering the subject of locality was instituted. This resulted in the discovery that there was a very remarkable difference. In one county, the proportion of divorces to marriages was as one to three, while in another, the proportion was one divorce to 830 marriages. These facts are very suggestive. They raise the question whether the evil is not only contagious, but hereditary. The more we know of life, the more we learn that the good and the evil that we do does not end with ourselves, but affects others around us and may affect future generations.

For none of us liveth unto himself and no man dieth unto himself (Rom. 14:7).

Subdued by a Pet.

A strange story of convict life is related by a Boston journal. It appears that a convict under a life sentence gave a great deal of trouble to the warden and officers. He was a man of gigantic strength, very sullen and liable to fits of violence, in which he would attack the officers or his fellow-prisoners with murderous fury. But gradually a change was noticed in him. One of the officers declared that he had seen him smile, and the convict became quieter and more gentle. There was nothing to explain the change, and all the officers wondered at it. Fearing he was plotting some mischief the officers watched him closely. When he thought himself unobserved he was seen to glance under his outer garment at something hidden on his breast. Supposing it was a knife or some other weapon, two of them approached him from behind, pulled him down and made an examination. His hidden treasure proved to be nothing more than a rat. The man had made friends with it and was evidently very fond of it. The officers were going to kill it, when the prisoner interposed and begged for its life. He said, "It is the only creature who ever showed any affection for me. Let me keep it and I promise you I will give you no more trouble." The pledge was too welcome to be rejected. The queer pet was restored to the prisoner and from that time he became a model convict, obedient and docile. This is not the only instance of love taming a fierce nature. It is the most powerful influence we know of and it is the influence which God employs to change our hearts. When a man begins to love God he has taken the first step toward holiness and all good.

He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God and God in him (John 4:16).

Clearing the Way.

Workmen have been busy during the past two weeks in a work of demolition rendered necessary by the strained relations between our Government and that of Spain. On Staten Island, N. Y., heavy batteries have been constructed for the protection of the Bay of New York. It was found, however, that several houses, some of them handsome stone edifices, reared their heads between the guns and the bay. The Government purchased them and the land on which they stand, and is demolishing them. It is a significant fact that as one of these houses, which is said to be worth twenty thousand dollars, was so substantially built that the workmen found it difficult to pull it down, dynamite was used to expedite the work of destruction. All the buildings now lie in ruins and a large force of laborers is employed in clearing away the debris. It seems a pity to thus destroy valuable dwellings, but if they are obstacles to defence in time of danger they have to go, lest worse losses ensue. That is one of the evils of war that every consideration has to yield to the one of security.

Ye have numbered the houses of Jerusalem; and the houses have ye broken down to fortify the wall (Isa. 22:10).

as to how long they would suffice to feed the destitute people. When they heard that enough was on hand for thirty days, they all seemed to feel a sense of relief. They all asked me what would be necessary in order to effectively administer relief to these people for some time to come, how much weekly expense it would entail upon the generous people of the United States, and whether I thought that the contributions would keep up in sufficient volume to meet the requirements. I replied that at the rate of one-half pound of food per capita per day (thus making allowance for many little children who could not consume full rations, and for a certain small percentage who could in a measure contribute to their own support), it would require 100,000 pounds, or fifty tons of food daily to support all these destitute people. This would make 350 tons per week, 300 tons of which should be some farinaceous food, and fifty tons either codfish, bacon, or lard.

"Taking the cheapest food, corn meal, as a basis of calculation, it would require $6,000 per week for corn-meal, and $6,000 for bacon. This, together with $3,000 for canned milk for the mothers and babies, and the necessary expense attached to the distribution would entail a total expense of $15,000 weekly. I expressed implicit faith in the generosity of the American people, at least to the extent involved.

"I believe that the most effective way of administering this great relief work in Cuba would be the establishment of a dozen warehouses, with competent superintendents and a dozen traveling men or inspectors, whose business it should be to travel from town to town, making a weekly visit to each town, to see that the food is properly distributed and reaches the persons for whom it is intended. This, with a free use of railroad transportation—which, no doubt, would be granted—and free use of the telegraph wires, would make the work so effective that every sufferer in Cuba would be reached.

"As it is, we have extended relief operations from one end of the island to the other. Direct shipments have been made to 134 different towns, including the different villages, townships and hamlets dependent upon them for supplies, the total is raised to 403 places satisfactorily provisioned for about ten days, and in these 403 places there are, according to the most authentic statistics obtainable, 205,000 destitute reconcentrados and 174,000 who are not considered in destitute circumstances. With shipments continuing at regular intervals of ten days each, there will be no further demand for supplies until the end of the present month, when at least 1,500 tons should be shipped, in order to relieve the destitute people of the island of Cuba for the month of May.

"In all my efforts, I found the Cuban people, some of whom may have been Spaniards (as my ignorance of the language did not enable me to recognize any difference) very willing to co-operate, and they did everything in their power to help make the work as effective as possible. With the exception of an accident to one railway train—the nature of which will forever remain a mystery—we met with no untoward experiences of any kind. The large train consisting of fourteen cars, carrying 125 tons, went through from town to town in excellent shape.

"We asked some reconcentrados who were gathered around a railway station where relief had just arrived, why they did not go into the fields and work, they replied that they had nothing to work with. When we told them that, in view of the exceeding fertility of the ground, much material was not necessary, and that even by scraping the soil with their fingers, it would be possible to make enough of a crop to keep them alive, they said that if they were to make the attempt, the Spanish soldiers would be apt to shoot them, and if the Spanish soldiers did not, the insurgents would be sure to strip the very shirts off their backs. An American, under similar circumstances would take the chances of being shot or robbed and make some effort to work.

"We found a great number of these reconcentrados already so hopelessly indifferent to their own physical condition, that they would stand in the streets and stare, and not even reach out their hands and ask for aid, probably because they had lost all faith in human nature. Only the children are active in the matter of begging, and wherever a reconcentrado child is found, you may depend upon seeing the outstretched hand appealing for alms. This is the case in the cities as well as in the country: it is the case all over the island: and I am informed that, with the exception of one or two points, where sugar refineries are in operation, the same conditions prevail.

"Now, that the problem of reaching these people seems to have been solved, the momentous question, 'How long shall this work continue?' demands the intelligent consideration of every philanthropically inclined person in this country. It is a problem which may be very difficult of solution, but I do believe that it will be solved, and solved soon.

"Great changes are apparent in the island of Cuba. Already the presence of Americans has had its influence for good, and has borne fruit. Many places, which, a few months ago, were a stench in the nostrils of the people, have been renovated and improved, not always by Americans, and not infrequently by Spaniards and Cubans, who were ashamed of these places with Americans around to look at them. And I have found that if Americans take the initial step, although it may be a short one, the Cubans and Spaniards are apt to take a longer stride in the same direction.

Interest in the relief work continues to extend in our own land, and hundreds of churches and religious organizations are energetically working to save a life in Cuba. Shipments of supplies will continue to be sent regularly as heretofore, and it is hoped that the contributions will be on a scale commensurate with the necessities of the suffering Cubans so that there shall be no recurrence of the horrors that prevailed previous to the sending of American relief. It is no exaggeration to state that there are many thousands of reconcentrados who would long ere now have been dead and in poor emaciated bodies lying in the trenches, who owe to American generosity the fact that they are alive to-day.

Our illustrations this week are of special interest. The colored photograph on the first page shows a scene at the large private building, known as Jesus del Monte, in Havana, where a relief station has been opened by the Fund and where many of the reconcentrados are supplied with food. Another illustration shows a similar scene at our Central Relief Station in the same city; a third gives a view of some of the workers in the Estrella Street Station, and still another shows an open-air distribution of food to reconcentrados at Los Fossos, the municipal shelter in Havana, where so many of the destitute were cooped up for months, while starvation and disease swept them off by hundreds. Not the least interesting photograph is that which shows four of the sufferers in the convalescent ward of the Relief hospital, Havana, well clothed and covered with the garments and blankets sent through the King's Daughters in New York. They are gradually returning to health and strength. On another page appears a photograph of a clinic at the Orphanage, where famine sufferers with limbs greatly swollen by the dreaded hunger-dropsy, are being treated by the Fund physicians.

AWAITING THE DISTRIBUTION OF RELIEF AT LOS FOSSOS, HAVANA.

LITTLE CONVALESCENTS IN HOSPITAL.

Hundreds of letters are received at the CHRISTIAN HERALD office by every mail expressing the warmest sympathy in the relief work. We give below a few extracts:

Miss Mary C. O., Monte Vista, Col., contributes $3—"Trusting it may help relieve, though but a little, the terrible woe in Cuba." $6.25 is contributed by the Brainard F. B. Sunday School of Minneapolis, Minn.—"With a God bless you and your work." "Let us know the worst, and our sympathies and our help be freely given. Except for the mercy of God might have been ourselves," write some friends in Amherst, Mass. ($1).

S. D., Hume, O., ($1), writes: "May the much-needed work go on in the name of the good Master." "This is only given in the name of Jesus," writes D. A. Hall, Sexton, Ia. ($1). Ten dollars from a Friend and Fellow-sufferer" in Amherst, Mass.

The Y. P. S. C. E., Wentworth, South Dakota ($6), writes: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me" (Matt. 25:40). Mrs. J. P. K., Plainfield, Conn. ($2), writes: "I pray this may do some good: my heart aches for the poor sufferers." "May the God of nations come to save the starving," is the hope of Ida by G. A., Poland, N. Y. ($2).

The Cuban Relief Committee appointed by the Young People's Christian Union, of Fort Wayne, Ind., has raised about 2000 pounds of provisions of various kinds and in cash the sum of $221.55. These are illustrations of the activity that prevails everywhere among the Christian people of our land in behalf of the starving people of Cuba.

"A. A. P., Osceola, Ind. ($2.00).—"My note for the Cuban sufferers. I send it because Jesus would have done so."

"J. W., Delphos, Iowa (60c.), writes: "It is a pleasure for me to do now what I should have done weeks ago; it has not been all neglect for I am an old man (past sixty), and my opportunities for writing are not of the best. I enclose this pittance for the perishing Cubans, and may God add his blessing to it."

The public school pupils of Paulding, Ohio, have sent $4.25 through Mrs. L. C. Armage, who writes: "The pupils were asked to each bring one cent for their little fellow-sufferers in Cuba. Some sacrificed the penny which was for candy, but the money was given cheerfully, and much interest manifested."

Mrs. R. L. N., Yalva, Ill., ($1), sends the widow's mite and hopes God's blessing will go with it.

Rev. W. A. Elliot, pastor of First Baptist Church, Newton, Kans., has sent us $25, which he says is the offering of a poor woman in his church, who sends it with her prayers for the speedy relief of the Cubans.

In an article in Harper's Weekly, Mr. Harold Martin, who has just returned from Cuba, gives this graphic picture of the suffering among the destitute reconcentrados in the city and suburbs of Matanzas:

"With her ten thousand starving people, with the gaunt beggars crowding the streets, with her suffering women in pitiful and threadbare mourning, and the silent records of the trenches for the dead, Matanzas was a sad city in the beginning of March, 1898. This is one of the cities to which our country has sent food and medicine, to which the American relief will be regularly supplied.

"On Saturday morning, March 12, the first American relief—long expected, long talked of, often asked for—arrived in the United States steamer Fern and the Norwegian tramp steamer Bergen. The Fern brought thirty-five tons from Key West, and the Bergen delivered fifty tons from New York and Philadelphia. There was probably no place in stricken Cuba where the help from our country was more sorely needed than in Matanzas. Eighty-five tons of food for the starving! The news of it went through the city, and women and children and old men crowded down to the consul's office, long before the goods were landed on the wharf, bearing each a can or a sack to carry away his or her portion.

"The civil governor of Matanzas has appointed a committee of seven men to direct the distribution of this relief. Four of these men are doctors, most of them are Cubans, and they are all men of good reputation and standing in the community. Mr. Brice has been our consul in Matanzas for nearly four years. He saw the beginning of the war, he witnessed its horrors and its cruelties, and now he is active in relieving the misery and starvation that follow, and he has the respect and commendation of all men who know him. Mr. Brice controls the warehouse, and will deliver food on orders signed by the governor only. If he suspects misapplication of the relief, he is at liberty to refuse to deliver until he has seen the abuse remedied.

AT THE CLINIC IN THE LEE ORPHANAGE.

"Mr. Brice is also free to send food where he may see fit, independent of the governor or of the governor's committee. In this way he 'will reach many of the silent sufferers.' This class is large, and perhaps the hardest to reach in all Cuba. They are the people who by the war and its consequences have been reduced from affluence and comfort to absolute inevitable want. They are starving within the walls of their dismantled homes. Everything has been sold; the house itself is given by deed for the few dollars that will carry them along a month longer. Too proud to beg, too sensitive to come openly for relief, they despairingly drag through the bitter days, doing their feeble best to hold on to life—it is often hard for one to imagine for what reasons. Then, in an apathy that is born in the race and fed by years and months of physical suffering and mental anguish, they hopelessly and gently die.

"It is a great pleasure to record that on March 14 one thousand dollars in cash was sent to our consul in Matanzas for the express relief of these silent sufferers, and a like amount was sent to the American consul in Sagua la Grande. The money was given by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of New York. The same vessels that brought this relief to Matanzas have proceeded to Sagua la Grande, bearing as much food to that city as was left here. There the distribution of the food is in the hands of American Consul Barker.

"The four hospitals in Matanzas are receiving good and ample rations. On an allowance of a pound a day to each person, eighty-five tons of provisions will feed ten thousand people for seventeen days. The excellent arrangements completed in Havana by Mr. Lonis Klopsch, of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for the shipping to various points on the island of the American food received in that city, and the telling efforts of Mr. Klopsch to have this food sent down to Cuba from the United States, leave no donbt that Matanzas will receive a second supply before its present one is exhausted."

All contributions should be addressed: "Cuban Relief Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York City."
